I. ON «CONVENIENT ANONYMITY»

Professor Yves Simon² seems to agree with the doctrine contained in my brief essay on the primacy of the common good³.

...De Koninek has outlined, with unusual profundity and accuracy, the main aspects of a theory of the common good. It would be unfair to blame such a brief treatment for what we do not find in it. We do find in it a most valuable contribution to the definition of the common good and to the vindication of its primacy⁴.

The doctrine I outlined calls for many specifications and further developments, but it constitutes a very sound foundation for any further development of the theory of the common good⁵. Insofar as De Koninek's essay vindicates the primacy of the common good and carries out the criticism of definite positions, it is entirely praiseworthy⁶.

The positions and their necessary consequences which I consider representative of personalism and which I attack, he rightly qualifies as «vicious stupidities»⁷ and «monstrosities»⁸. When it comes to determining who are the personalists, Professor Simon has some understanding words to say:

Turning to the polemical side of the essay, we realize at once that the writer was confronted by a great difficulty. De Koninek's purpose is to vindicate the primacy of the common good against the personalists. It is a hard job, for the obvious reason that the term personalism covers a great variety of ill-defined doctrines and attitudes⁹.

While admitting there is some difficulty in identifying the personalists, Professor Simon is yet dissatisfied that my book should have named only those whose position was well-defined. And here is the reason for his dissatisfaction:

... On account of the very important part played by the concept of person in the work of Maritain, there is no reason why he [the reader] should not believe that the expression «the personalists» stands for Jacques Maritain¹.

Now it is glaringly obvious to Professor Simon that the ideas I describe as personalist are, with few exceptions and perhaps without any exception, just as odious to M. Maritain as they are to myself; that what I maintain concerning the primacy of the common good is just as dear to the latter as it is to myself. Hence, he does not hesitate to declare that, insofar as the reader might be left to believe that Jacques Maritain would disagree with any of the fundamental positions involved,

The net effect of the essay, insofar as Maritain is concerned, resembles that which could have been brought about—perhaps not so successfully—by plain calumny².

Yves Simon is indeed a friend. He does not mince words. As one of M. Maritain's most esteemed and faithful disciples, he is sure the doctrinal I condemn are not those of M. Maritain; and accordingly he gives me plainly to understand, that if I intended my readers to believe otherwise, I would be committing a simple calumny.

A second critic of my little work takes an astonishingly different view. For Father I. Th. Eschmann³ it is just as obvious that the most fundamental position of the personalism I attack is beyond a doubt that of M. Maritain. As for my own position, it is «manifest error». He does not in the least hesitate to say, that from the point of view of the littera Sancti Thomae this book is a danger to every reader who has neither the time nor the sufficient training to discover for himself, in a problem of extreme subtlety, the genuine Thomistic truth.—DM,204.

If that were true, my case would be sad enough. But there is much worse than that.

If they [Professor De K.'s doctrine and arguments] were true, then the personalists, and with them all the Christian Fathers and theologians and philosophers, should close their shops, go home and do penance, in cinere et ciliicio, for having grossly erred and misled the Christian world throughout almost two thousand years.—DM,189.

Let the reader be reminded of the sixth and seventh lect theologica to realize the predicament Father Eschmann has placed me in. And if such is indeed the case, the unshakable assurance and uninhibited violence of his article⁴ are quite understandable. Indeed one might even understand its sneering and irony if I actually used the facile device, and the absurd or dishonest methods which Father Eschmann lays to my charge:

1. Loc. cit., pp.532-3.

2. Ibid., p.533.

3. In Defense of Jacques Maritain, in The Modern Schoolman, vol. XXII, May 1945, n.4, pp.183-208. I shall henceforth refer to this article by the initials DM.

4. Unless the reader is acquainted with Father Eschmann's own complete text, he will hardly appreciate the directness of this reply.

Will it be granted that it is inadmissible to read St. Thomas with scissors and paste, by cutting the texts out of their literary and historical context and just quoting what, in a particular instance, seems to be suitable? Will it be granted that, if St. Thomas has explicitly stated and solved a given problem, a Thomist worthy of that name is obliged to take account of this fact and can not afford to refer to some other texts which either have nothing to do with the problem or, at best, refer to it in a distant and mediate fashion?—DM,189-190.

My Opponent is not just making rash statements. The criterion he uses to defend the manifest truth of the position I attack is, as he frequently repeats, the littera Sancti Thomae.

On page 187, my Opponent has inserted a note of a personal character, which should add to the weight of his denunciation.

... I have the privilege to regard both Jacques Maritain and Charles De Koninck as dear friends. The job, therefore, of examining and determining the truth of their respective positions is very painful to me.—n.3.

Since in spite of this protestation he discharges himself of his obligation with unconscionable gusto, it must be that Father Eschmann—who was for several years a professor in the Collegio Angelico, Rome, who taught at Laval University, Quebec, who is engaged at the Institut d'Études médiévales Albert-le-Grand of the University of Montreal, and is now a member of the staff of the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Toronto—is entirely confident the position I attack is very definitely that of Jacques Maritain, that this position is true and that my own is a very dangerous one indeed.

Why did I not name M. Maritain? Father Eschmann has a very simple explanation. «The» personalists is an all too convenient anonymity which permits every attack, and leaves every avenue of retreat wide open.—DM,184.

Compare now Professor Simon's judgment of my essay with that of Father Eschmann. Presumably both my critics are especially qualified to judge whether or not my own position concurs with that of Maritain. Professor Simon holds that my doctrine is true, that the personalist positions I attack are vicious stupidities and monstrosities and that the net effect of letting the reader believe my essay is aimed at Maritain resembles that which could have been brought about by plain calumny. Father Eschmann feels «obliged totally and categorically to reject De K.'s thesis» (DM, 187, n.9) which, at one point, he claims is opposed to all the Christian Fathers, theologians and philosophers; he emphatically maintains that the doctrine I attack and he defends is that of Maritain; that «the personalists» is but a cowardly device «which permits every attack, and leaves every avenue of retreat wide open».

How is it then, that of these two critics, both especially qualified and presumably well acquainted with the writings of Jacques Maritain, the one can feel utterly confident that the latter is, while the other can feel quite as confident he definitely is not the true adversary at whom was directed La primauté du bien commun contre les personalistes? Who is to blame for these contradictory judgments?

Has it occurred to anyone that I may have foreseen this very situation including the criticisms that would be heaped upon me? Or has it occurred to any one that if

The problem of Person and Society in the philosophy of St. Thomas, for many years past a favorite topic among European Thomists, has recently become an acute question on the continent of North America, owing, in no small measure, to the publication by the Dean of the Faculty of Philosophy at Laval University, Quebec, Professor Charles De Koninck, of a book entitled De la primauté du bien commun contre les personnalistes. Le principe de l'ordre nouveau.—DM, 183; and if Jacques Maritain is so very obviously implicated in this debate, that Jacques Maritain is still among the living and may be presumed able to speak for himself?

But let us suppose that Jacques Maritain has spoken clearly and consistently on this subject (a supposition hardly reconcilable with the contradictory judgments of Father Eschmann and of Professor Simon), that he has treated it in philosophical fashion and that he really is the main target of my essay against the personalists. Could I have no justifiable reason for that failure to name my adversary which Father Eschmann calls «anonymity»? My Opponent cannot imagine any but this: «The» personalists is (can all too convenient anonymity which permits every attack, and leaves every avenue of retreat wide open) and this notwithstanding that in the same moment he finds the personalism I attack so very plainly and incapable that «represented most prominently by Jacques Maritain» as to deprive my guilty anonymity of any sensible motive whatever.—DM, 184.

The reader is acquainted with certain polemical Opuscula, such as the De Aeternitate mundi contra mormurantes, or the De Unitate intellectus contra averroistas parisienses. Of these works we may surely say that they too comprise more than their objective, abstract content, more than the mere words in which they are written. They embrace all the circumstances of time, place, and occasion with which their publication is surrounded.—DM, 184.

Yet who are these anonymous Mormurantes who lay claim to such subtlety in perceiving contradictions, «as if they alone were men and wisdom born with them»? Did St. Thomas resort to «the» Parisian Averroists as to a convenient anonymity which permits every attack, and leaves every avenue of retreat wide open? Who speaks «in angulis» and before young people who cannot judge of such difficult matters»¹? That he intended to attack Siger of Brabant is susceptible of strict proof.

1. «Et hoc etiam patet diligenter consideranti dictum eorum qui posuerunt mundum semper fuisse: quia nihilominus ponunt eum a Deo factum, nihil de hac repugnantia intellectuum sentientes. Ergo illi qui tam subtiliter eam percipiunt, soli sunt homines, et cum eis ortur sapientia.»—De Aeternitate mundi contra mormurantes, Opuscula Omnia, ed. Mandonnet, t. I, p. 26.

Indeed the circumstances of writing and publication are contingent. More than that, they are the very own circumstances of the writer himself, the contingentia, variabilia, inenarrabilia of human actions. That is why they should be left to the inalienable prudential judgment of the individual person. Has it occurred to my Opponent that there are circumstances, even of my public action, which he does not know and which are most certainly none of his concern? Can he conceive of no circumstances in which he might be right in attacking an anonymous adversary, or in which he might even do so anonymously? If, in some given instance, Father Eschmann might say what he thinks I should have done, he cannot tyrannically impose his judgment of what I should do, as the ultimate norm of my own. But it has pleased him to grant me only one motive. Qualis unusquisque est, talis et finis videtur.

We have all heard the story of the thief who in order to distract the attention of the people about him, cried Thief! Thief! Everyone looked the other way, and so forth. But there is also the saying that 'you can't fool all the people all the time'. It will soon be clear that the Thief! Thief! device, quite unconsciously, I believe, is the key-note to my Opponent's whole article In Defensam of Maritain.

Who would suspect Father Eschmann of himself exemplifying that very subterfuge of «convenient anonymity» which he lays to my charge, and in the very section of his article in which he brands anonymity as permitting every attack and leaving every avenue of retreat wide open? Is it possible that the person he names is at the same time made the target for an adversary unnamed? That he also has in mind a person other than myself is indeed susceptible of the type of strict proof my Opponent avails himself of in such matters. Who, in connection with personalism, warns us against «a revival of the polycephalus monster of Pelagianism»?—DM, 185. Whom will the reader of my booklet, the Preface not excluded, have in mind when my Opponent refers to «a work which pretends to exhibit the pure wisdom of St. Thomas Aquinas»?—DM, 189. (And in this connection, why did Father Eschmann add to the original «pure wisdom» his own words: «of St. Thomas Aquinas»?) Is his reader, unacquainted with my text, meant to believe that I claim to «exhibit the pure wisdom of St. Thomas Aquinas»? If it is not deliberately planned, why does he condone with the ignominious ambiguity of jestingly referring to «a work which pretends to exhibit the pure wisdom of St. Thomas Aquinas»? And yet while indulging in practices as offensive as this, he ventures to appeal to the charity of the reader:

1. «Si quis autem gloriandus de falsi nominis scientia velit contra hæc que scripsimus aliquid dicere; non loquatur in angulis, nec coram pueris, qui nesciunt de causis arduis judicare; sed contra hoc scriptum scribat, si audeat: et inveniet non solum me, qui aliorum sum minus, sed multos alios, qui veritatis sunt cultores, per quos ejus errori resistetur, vel incarnatione consulatur.»—De Unitate intellectus contra averroistas parisienses, ibid., p. 69.

Let us be charitable and forget that such a statement («Les parties principales constituant matériellement l'univers. . .») has ever been made in a work which pretends to exhibit the pure wisdom of St. Thomas Aquinas.—DM, 189.

And at this very point my Opponent's kindly sentiments overflow into that footnote 12 of page 189, that unmistakable insinuation aimed at an anonymous target, again at the expense of his «dear friends»¹. But enough of this sort of thing.

II. ST. THOMAS ON PART AND WHOLE²

It is of no concern to us why Father Eschmann completely overlooks what I had to say on the nature of the common good. However, this omission does allow him to convey to the reader unacquainted with my text, the impression that I share my Opponent's own conception of the good and of the common good. What he means by a common good is already clear from the way he quotes against me a passage from the Encyclical Divini Redemptoris (Father Eschmann does not mention that I faced an objection construed from that very text, BC, 67-70) and another from the Encyclical Mystici Corporis Christi. The notion of common good which he has in mind throughout his attack is very distinctly the one I had emphatically and repeatedly denounced as totalitarian. To argue from his own notion most certainly leads to a «contradictory and unintelligible position».—DM, 184-5. But we shall return to section I of Father Eschmann's article in due course. Let us start from where he expressly claims to begin his «critique».—DM, 187, n.9.

On page 27 Professor De Koninck states that even the personalists will not have great difficulty in admitting, with him, that individual persons are subordinated to that ultimate separate and extrinsic good of the universe which is God, nor that this subordination is formally motivated by the fact that God is the common good. But this will not suffice. It must be stressed, indeed—such is the author's thesis—that persons are subordinated to the intrinsic common good of the universe, i.e. its order. And they are thus subordinated because they are material parts materially composing and materially constituting that order and common good. For, is not the ultimate reason why God has created the intellectual beings or persons none other than exactly the order and common good of the universe?—DM, 187.

1. Section I of Father Eschmann's article bears the title: «On censures, insinuations, and citations». See below, p. 101 n. 2.

2. The reader is warned that he may find this paper difficult to follow because of its apparent lack of plan. In order to write a true rebuttal of my Opponent's attack I have felt obliged to forsake an order more in accordance with the nature of the subject and intend merely to follow him step by step through the pages of his own work. Not only that, to be sure, I may give a quotation from an earlier or later page when it seems to state more fully and clearly some point under discussion; and there are also certain passages towards the beginning of my Opponent's work (his «controvery») which would be dealt with only at the close of my article for reasons the reader will discern by the time he reaches the last chapters. But my general procedure results inevitably in overlapping and repetition, and in abrupt transitions from one subject to the next, so that a considerable demand will be made on the attention. It is scarcely necessary to add that anyone seriously interested in this question should first read Father Eschmann's work and indeed keep a copy of it at hand as he studies this reply.

Since most of my Opponent's citations from St. Thomas are given in Latin only, I have not felt obliged to furnish translations of my own.

Then Father Eschmann quotes the passage in question:

Si l'on concède que les personnes singulières sont ordonnées au bien ultime séparé en tant que celui-ci a raison de bien commun, on ne concédera pas si volontiers que, dans l'univers même, les personnes ne sont voulues que pour le bien de l'ordre de l'unité, bien commun intrinsèque meilleur que les personnes singulières qui le constituent matériellement.—BC, 27.

The complete omission of what I had to say on the very nature of the common good already insured Father Eschmann a great deal of freedom. The passage quoted above would be «revolting» indeed if we were to interpret it in the light of the notion of common good he would have the reader believe to me mine, just as revolting as would be statements such as: Quælibet autem persona singularis comparatur ad totam communitatem, sicut pars ad totum; or: . . . *Iipse totus homo ordinatur, ut ad finem, ad totam communitatem cuius est pars*². If such statements were to be read in the light of the totalitarian notion of common good Father Eschmann would force upon me, how could we possibly attribute them to St. Thomas? But my Opponent was not satisfied with the freedom he derived from mere omission. He saw fit to paraphrase my text before quoting it. The critical reader must have observed that «des personnes singulières qui le constituent matériellement» was introduced by my Opponent's: «they are material parts materially composing and materially constituting that order. . .» Why does he add the word «material»? Is there no difference between «parts materially composing» and «material parts materially composing»? Lest there remain any doubt in the mind of the reader, let us see how he uses this difference.

Now that, thanks to his paraphrase, the persons have become material parts materially constituting the order of the universe, Father Eschmann proceeds to arrest the ambiguity of the word he himself has added, by substituting for my «order of the universe» the term «cosmos». Obviously, no one could possibly object to this substitution, since everyone should know that cosmos means «order of the universe»! But, at the same time, we also know that cosmos now definitely means the order of corporeal beings—the subject of what is called cosmology. Hence, how could anyone have the effrontery to object to Father Eschmann's inferring, from his own distorted paraphrase of my text, a position so coarse and unmistakably heretical that any Catholic will be shocked?

For, being material parts of the cosmos and subordinated, as material parts, to the stars and the spheres, they [the personalists, and with them all the Christian Fathers and theologians and philosophers] will have just as much responsibility, just as much choice, as the pistons in a steam engine.—DM, 189.

No wonder «Evan Professor De K. somehow seems to feel that his is a 'revolting' statement (cf. p.30)».—DM, 187³.

I must again call attention to Father Eschmann's opening paragraph of section II, which we have already quoted: («On page 27 Professor De

1. Illa II, q.64, a.2, 6.

2. Ibid., q.65, a.1, c.

3. Indeed on p.30 of my essay I said: «Bien sûr qu'on se révoltera contre cette conception st. . .» If Father Eschmann believes that the object of «on se révoltera» may, in this instance, be rendered by «revolting», he has been ill advised.

Koninek states... In the first part of this paragraph he allows that I distinguish between the ultimate separate and extrinsic good of the universe which is God and the intrinsic common good of the universe, i.e. its order. From this it should be clear, even to the reader unacquainted with my full text that, in my view, absolutely speaking, the former alone can be the ultimate reason why God has created the intellectual beings or persons. Nevertheless, in the last sentence of his paragraph, when my Opponent ironically states: «For, is not the ultimate reason why God has created the intellectual beings or persons none other than exactly the order and common good of the universe?» he gives the reader to understand that, in my view, the ultimate reason intrinsic to the universe must stand for the «ultimate reason» taken absolutely.

Having bridged the gulf between persons and «the pistons in a steam engine» by means of the «material parts of the cosmos», Father Eshemann immediately adds:

Let it be said, at once, that we simply refuse even to discuss this. Professor De K.'s own, private doctrine and thesis which is most patently erroneous. Let us be charitable and forget that such a statement («Les parties principales constituent matériellement l'univers...») has ever been made in a work which pretends to exhibit the pure wisdom of St. Thomas Aquinas.—DM, 189.

Father Eshemann makes much of the phrase «principal parts materially constituting the universe». Indeed he will use it to deal a blow from which its author is never to recover. Let us see how he will go about this. Would it not be desirable that an author who uses traditional philosophical notions knew exactly what they mean? In a recent work, Saint Joseph, Père vierge de Jésus (Montréal, 1944), M^{sr}. G. Breynat, a venerable missionary Bishop, in all seriousness and against the protest of a large group of theologians, defends the following definition of St. Joseph's paternity: It is «une causalité effective, négative, par abstention» of the child Jesus (pp. 84, 117 ff.). Professor De K.'s notion of a principal part materially constituting the universe is of the same caliber.—DM, 189, n.12.

In other words, to maintain that the principal or formal parts of a whole may be viewed in the line of material causality, as materially constitutive of that whole, is a grave misdemeanour deserving only ridicule. However, does not a part as part, whether principal or secondary, material or formal, corporeal or spiritual, belong to the genus of material cause? Is not any and every part «id ex quo»? Let us turn to St. Thomas' Comm. in II Physicorum, lect.5, (ed. Leon.) n.9. Aristotle's chapter 3 raises a doubt de hoc quod dicit, quod partes sunt cause materiales totius, cum supra partes definitionis rederit ad causam formalem. Et potest dici quod supra locutus est de partibus speciei, que cadunt in definitione totius: hic autem loquitur de partibus materie, in quarum definitione cadit totum, sicut circulus cadit in definitione semicirculi. Sed melius dicendum est quod licet partes speciei que ponuntur in definitione, comparentur ad suppositum naturae per motum cause formalis, tamen ad ipsam naturam cujus sunt partes comparantur ut materia: nam omnes partes comparantur ad totum ut imperfectum ad perfectum, que quidem est comparatio materie ad formam.

St. Thomas leaves no doubt as to the universality of this principle:

Manifestum est autem ex iis que dicta sunt in secundo (Physic.), quod totum habet rationem forme, partes autem rationem materie¹.

1. In III Physic., lect.12, n.2.

Now, whatever belongs to the very nature of a thing is inseparable from it. Will it be granted that a principal or formal part is still a part? If it does not have the ratio materie, why call it a part?

In that same footnote 12, page 189, Father Eshemann quotes with approval the following text taken from my essay, page 35:

Les créatures raisonnables peuvent atteindre des hauteurs de manière explicite le bien auquel toutes choses sont ordonnées; elles diffèrent par là des créatures irraisonnables, qui sont de purs instruments, qui sont utiles seulement et qui n'atteignent pas elles-mêmes de manière explicite le bien universel auquel elles sont ordonnées.

My Opponent then exclaims:

Very well! But how does this statement stand to the other one: «...les parties principales constituent matériellement l'univers...»?

Is it so utterly preposterous to consider the intellectual creatures as principal parts, yet materially constituting the universe? Here is the *littera Sancti Thomae*¹.

Considerandum est quod ex omnibus creaturis constituitur totum universum sicut totum ex partibus. Si autem aliquis totius et partium ejus velinus finem assignare, inveniemus primo quidem, quod singule partes (A) Sic scilicet et in partibus universi, unaquaque creatura est, propter seipsum proprium actum et perfectum touch.

Secundo vero, quod pars ignobilior (B) Secundo autem, creatura ignobilior est propter nobilitatem; sicut scilicet partes sunt propter nobilitatem; sicut creatura que sunt infra propter eam.

Tertio vero, omnes partes sunt (C) Ulteriori autem, singule creature sunt propter perfectionem totius et materia propter formam: partes enim sunt quasi materia totius.

Uterius autem, totus homo est (D) Uterius autem, totum universum, propter aliquem finem extrinsecum, puta ut fruatur Deo.

(E) *quavis creatura rationales specialiter quodam modo supra hoc habent finem Deum, quem attingere possunt sua operatione, cognoscendo et amando*².

Et sic patet quod divina bonitas est finis omnium corporalium.

The «singule creature (quæ) sunt propter perfectionem totius universi»(C) comprise the «creature nobiliores» as well as the «creature ignobiliores»(B), and all of them are «quasi materia totius»(C). In this

1. Ia, q.65, a.2, c.

2. «... Quod si totum aliquid non sit ultimus finis, sed ordinetur ad finem ultimum, ultimus finis partis non est ipsum totum, sed aliquid aliud. Universitas autem creaturarum ad quam comparatur homo ut pars ad totum, non est ultimus finis, sed ordinatur in Deum sicut in ultimum finem. Unde bonum universi non est ultimus finis hominis, sed ipse Deus».—Ia IIæ, q.2, a.8, ad 2.

perspective(C), the «creature nobiliores» are not the «perfectio totius» which is as the form. For, the «forma... universi consistit in distinctione et ordine partium ejus»; the good of this order is «formale respectu singularium sicut perfectio totius respectu partium». It is in the previous perspective (B)—«creature ignobiliores sunt propter nobiliores»—that the intellectual creatures may be compared to the form. But with respect to the whole universe, the «creature nobiliores» are still «quasi materia totius»: «des parties principales constituent matériellement l'univers», for, to the order of the universe, «quælibet creatura ordinatur, sicut pars ad formam totius»³. And now my Opponent might well ask how the latter statement of Ia, q.65, a.2, c.: «quamvis creaturæ rationales speciali quodam modo supra hoc habeant finem Deum, quem attingere possunt sua operatione, cognoscendo et amando», stands to the four preceding divisions.

While the head of the body is the principal part of the body, it is still a member, a part, of the body, and in this respect, it is «materially constitutive». Obviously this involves an imperfection. But is it an imperfection incompatible with the «partes nobiliores» of the universe? Is not Christ, Who is the Head of the Church, a member and a part according to His humanity? It is according to His divinity that he cannot be a part of the universe. And why not? Because, in this respect, He is the common good of the whole universe.

Estis membra dependentia de Christo membro, quod quidem dicitur membrum secundum humanitatem, secundum quam præcipue dicitur Ecclesie caput. Nam secundum divinitatem non habet rationem membri aut partis, cum sit commune bonum totius universi.

Was it Father Eschmann who asked: «Would it not be desirable that an author who uses traditional philosophical notions knew exactly what they mean?» Would this be another instance of my Opponent's Thief! Thief! method?

III. A THOMISTIC PROOF OF A «REVOLTING» STATEMENT

Let us now examine Father Eschmann's exposure of my «Thomistic proof» for a statement which, he says, even its author seems to find «revolting».—DM, 187. My Opponent is wholly unaware that what I had said already on the nature of the good and of the common good is essential

Cum autem de toto universo loquimur educendo in esse, non possumus aliter loqui, creatum invenire ex quo possit sumi ratio quare sit tale vel tale; unde, cum nea quodam ex parte divine potentie que est infinita, nec divine bonitatis, que rebus non indiget ratio determinate dispositionis universi sumi possit, oportet quod ejus ratio sumatur ex simplici voluntate producentis ut si queratur, quare quantitas cæli sit tanta et non major, non potest hujus ratio reddi nisi ex voluntate producentis».—*Q. to the problem at issue. The good, as I take it throughout my essay, is not the perfection of being that is formally identical with being, but the perfection of being as having the nature of an end.—BC, 7. For,

In quantum... unum ens est secundum esse suum, perfectivum alterius et conservativum, habet rationem finis respectu illius quod ab eo perfectur: et inde est quod omnes recte definitæ bonum ponant in ratione quod aliquid quod pertinet ad habitudinem finis; unde Philosophus dicit in I Ethic. (in princip.), quod bonum optime definitur dicentes, quod bonum est quod omnia appetant.

My Adversary might have warned, too, by the adage: «the good is diffusive of itself».—BC, 7. And the good is diffusive of itself inquantum hujusmodi, secundum sui ipsius rationem. May we recall what this diffusion stands for in connection with the good taken formally?

... Diffrondere, licet secundum proprietatem vocabuli videatur importare operationem causæ efficientis, tamen largo modo potest importare habitudinem eiusdem causæ, sicut influere et facere, et alia hujusmodi. Cum autem dicitur quod bonum est diffusivum secundum sui rationem, non est intelligendum effusio secundum quod importat operationem causæ efficientis, sed secundum quod importat habitudinem causæ finalis; et talis diffusio non est inebriante aliqua virtute superaddita. Dicit autem bonum diffusionem causæ finalis, et non causæ agentis: tum quia effectus in quantum hujusmodi, non est rei mensura et perfectio, sed magis initium; tum quia effectus participat causam efficientem secundum assimilationem formæ tantum; sed finem consequitur res secundum totum esse suum, et in hoc consistebat ratio boni?

And now we raise the question: Is it in the very being of the individual persons taken separately that we find most perfectly realized the good which God produces, that is, the good that is in the universe itself? or is it rather the total order of the universe which most perfectly represents and is closer to, the ultimate separated and extrinsic good which is God? It should be recalled that where this question is proposed in my book it is in face of the contention that the greatest perfection within the universe consists first and absolutely in the individual persons taken separately, whereas the perfection of the total order of the universe would be secondary. Immediately after the «revolting» statement, I said:

On voudrait plutôt que l'ordre de l'univers ne fut qu'une superstructure de personnes que Dieu veut, non pas comme parties, mais comme tous radicalement indépendants; et ce ne serait qu'en second que ces tous seraient des parties. En effet, les créatures raisonnables ne diffèrent-elles pas des créatures irraisonnables en ce qu'elles sont voulues et gouvernées pour elles-mêmes, non seulement quant à l'espèce, mais aussi quant à l'individu? «Les actes... de la créature raisonnable sont dirigés par la divine providence, non seulement en raison de leur appartenance à l'espèce, mais aussi en tant qu'ils sont des actes personnels». Donc, conclurait-on, les personnes individuelles sont elles-mêmes des biens voulus d'abord pour soi et en soi supérieurs au bien du tout accidentel qu'elles constituent par voie de conséquence et de complément.—BC, 27.

So the problem is not whether the universe is some kind of super-individual to whom God wills the enjoyment of all the things that He makes and governs, but whether the good that is the universe is the most perfect final cause that God has made. Now, if such is the case, it follows, in this perspective, that any particular good, any part of the universe, whether it is a person or not, will be ordered to this good of the universe, insofar as «single creature sunt propter perfectionem totius universi».

Nor can we breach my Opponent's confusions without recalling, at this juncture, what I had earlier said about the common good. Since he has quoted against me a passage from the Encyclical Mystici Corporis Christi (DM, 183, 186) with particular emphasis on the words «...utpote personarum sunt», it must be that, in his mind—and his reader is apparently to be left with the same understanding—the common good whose primacy I defend is not attained by the persons, that this common good, indeed, is as the good of a natural body which so unites the parts that each lacks its own individual subsistence, so that the different members are destined solely to their good through the whole. Let me choose another, of several possible citations, to show that this is indeed the interpretation he makes:

The most essential and the dearest aim of Thomism is to make sure that the personal contact of all intellectual creatures with God, as well as their personal subordination to God, be in no way interrupted. Everything else—the whole universe and every social institution—must ultimately minister to this purpose; everything must foster and strengthen and protect the conversation of the soul, every soul, with God. It is characteristically Greek and pagan to interpose the universe between God and intellectual creatures. Is it necessary to remind Thomists that they should not, in any way whatever, revive the old pagan blasphemy of a divine cosmos?—DM, 192.

I think we have the right to presume that my Opponent has read my essay with care. How then can his understanding of the doctrine I defend be reconciled with even the very first pages of my little book?

Dès lors, le bien commun n'est pas un bien qui ne serait pas le bien des particuliers. Dans ce cas, il serait commun par accident seulement, il serait proprement singulier, ou, si l'on veut, il différencierait du bien singulier des particuliers en ce qu'il serait ultimus. Or, quand nous distinguons le bien commun du bien particulier, nous n'entendons pas par là qu'il n'est pas le bien des particuliers: s'il n'était pas le bien des particuliers, il ne serait pas vraiment commun.

Le bien est ce que toutes choses désirent en tant qu'elles désirent leur perfection. Cette perfection est pour chacune d'elles son bonum—bonum suum—, et, en ce sens, son bien est un bien propre. Mais alors, le bien propre ne s'oppose pas au bien commun. En effet, le bien propre auquel tend naturellement un être, le «bonum suum», peut s'entendre de diverses manières, selon les divers biens dans lesquels il trouve sa perfection.—BC, 9-10.

In fact, the good that is proper to one person and distinguished from that of another person, is alien to the good of the other person. Likewise, the common good that is proper to one community, is alien to the common good that is proper to another community.

...Bonum commune est finis singularum personarum in communitate existentium; sicut bonum totius, finis est cujuslibet partium. *Bonum autem unius personae singularis non est finis alterius*¹.

That is why I insisted:

C'est ignorer spéculativement le bien commun que de le considérer comme un bien étranger, comme un «bonum alienum» opposé au «bonum suum»: on limite, alors, le «bonum suum» au bien singulier de la personne singulière. Dans cette position, la subordination du bien privé au bien commun voudrait dire subordination du bien le plus parfait de la personne, à un bien étranger; le tout et la partie seraient étrangers l'un à l'autre: le tout de la partie ne serait pas «son tout».—BC, 30-31.

Since my Opponent opposes to my position the «utpote personarum» of the above-mentioned Encyclical, why does he ignore the following passages of my essay:

Nous répondons que la communauté de ce bien ne doit pas s'entendre d'une communauté de prédication, mais d'une communauté de causalité. Le bien commun n'est pas commun comme «animal» par rapport à «bovine», et «bovine», mais comme le moyen universel de connaître, qui dans son unité atteint les connus dans ce qu'ils ont de plus propre. Il s'étend à plusieurs, non pas grâce à une confusion, mais à cause de sa détermination très élevée qui s'étend principalement à ce qu'il y a de plus élevé dans les inférieurs: «une cause plus élevée a un effet presque plus élevé». Il s'étend à Pierre, non pas d'abord en tant que Pierre est animal, ni même en tant qu'il est nature raisonnable seulement, mais en tant qu'il est «cette» nature raisonnable: il est le bien de Pierre envisagé dans sa personnalité la plus propre. C'est pourquoi le bien commun est aussi le bien le plus intime des personnes entre elles et le plus noble.—BC, 54-55.

L'indépendance des personnes les unes des autres dans la vision (béatifique) même n'exclut pas de l'objet cette universalité qui veut dire, pour toute intelligence créée, essentielle communicabilité à plusieurs. —BC, 52.

L'indépendance présuppose cette communicabilité. —BC, 52.

Comme les précédentes, cette objection appuie adhésivement l'interprétation que les collectivistes font de notre conception de la société. Or, la société n'est pas une unité séparable de ses membres: elle est constituée de personnes qui sont à l'image de Dieu. Et c'est cette société, non pas une entité quasi abstraite, mais constituée de personnes, qui est de l'intention principale de Dieu. —BC, 54.

La cité n'est pas, ou ne peut pas être, un «pour soi» figé et refermé sur soi, opposé comme un singulier à d'autres singuliers: ou bien doit être identiquement le bien de ses membres. Si le bien commun était le bien de la cité en tant que celle-ci est, sous un rapport accidentel, une sorte d'individu, il serait du coup bien particulier et proprement étranger aux membres de la société. Il faudrait même accorder à l'organisation ainsi ravie à ses membres, intelligence et volonté. La cité serait alors comme un tyran anonyme qui s'assujettit l'homme. L'homme serait pour la cité. Ce bien ne serait ni commun ni bien de natures raisonnables. L'homme serait soumis à un bien étranger.—BC, 68-69.

En fait, le personnalisme fait sienne la notion totalitaire de l'Etat. Sous les régimes totalitaires, le bien commun s'est singularisé, et il s'oppose en singulier plus puissant à des singuliers purement et simplement assujettis. Le bien commun a perdu sa note distinctive, il devient bien étranger. Il a été subordonné à ce monstre d'invention moderne qu'on appelle l'Etat, non pas l'Etat pris comme synonyme de société civile ou de cité, mais l'Etat qui signifie une cité engée en une sorte de personne physique.—BC, 75.

I am not aware that Father Eschmann has anywhere said that my notion of the common good is false, although he violently attacks its application to God as the object of created beatitude. But I think that, from the above quotations, it is unmistakably clear that his notion of the common good as such is not mine; that he hopelessly distorts my notion; that the doctrine he attributes to me is, in fact, his own distortion and that the texts just quoted from my essay are definitely opposed to his own notion of the common good. These citations make it plain, in short, that I must energetically reject all possibility of a subordination of the person to Father Eschmann's common good, or to anything like the common good as he understands it. Hence, when he says that we may be certain that, even within definite orders, my Opponent's totalitarian common good could not possibly be accepted, by any Thomist, as superior in any sense over the particular good of persons.

1. Father Eschmann quotes this passage (DM, 198) but ignores its implication.

There is a proper and profound Thomistic doctrine of the relative superiority, within definite orders, of their respective common goods over the particular goods contained in those orders (DM, 184).

No Thomist could accept Father Eschmann's unfortunate notion of part and whole. That it is not even applicable to the moral whole and part is obvious not only from what we have already quoted, but from what he calls the antecedens of the proof of personalism.

It seems to me—salvo meliore iudicio—that the bare essence of this doctrine might be summed up in the following enthymema: St. Thomas says: Ad rationem personæ exigitur quod sit totum completum; or again: Ratio partis contrahitur persone. Hence, Jacques Maritain concludes, the person, qua person, is not a part of society; and if a person is such a part, this «being part» will not be based upon the metaphysical formality and precision of «being person».

The antecedens pertains to the littera Sancti Thomæ.—DM, 205.

Since Father Eschmann has asserted that I «read St. Thomas with scissors and paste, by cutting texts out of their literary and historical context and just quoting what, in a particular instance, seems to be suitable» (DM, 189), the reader will hardly be inclined to suspect him of doing just that with every single quotation from St. Thomas he brandishes against me. Let us examine the two phrases here brought to our attention. He refers the reader to «3 Sent., d.5, III, 2». The article in question considers: Utrum anima separata sit persona. The immediate context of the first line quoted by my Opponent is:

Ad tertium dicendum quod anima rationalis dicitur hoc aliquid per modum quo esse subsistens est hoc aliquid, etiam si habeat naturam partis; sed ad rationem personæ exigitur ulterius quod sit totum completum.

The context of the four words which form his second quotation is:

Sed hæc opinio (Platonis) non potest stare; quia sic corpus animæ accidentaliter adveniret. Unde hoc nomen homo de cuius intellectu est anima et corpus, non significaret unum per se, sed per accidens; et ita non esset in genere substantiæ.

Alia opinio est Aristotelis, . . . quam omnes moderni sequuntur, quod anima unitur corpori sicut forma materiæ. Unde anima est pars humanæ nature, et non natura quedam per se. Et quia ratio partis contrahitur rationi personæ, ut dictum est, ideo anima separata non potest dici persona; quia quantumvis separata non sit pars actu, tamen habet naturam ut sit pars.

No person could be part of a substantial «unum per se». But the human soul is but a part of man. Therefore the soul alone is not the person. Now why should Father Eschmann confront me with these texts, in which the term «part» is used exclusively of the soul as part of the human person, unless for him «to be a part» means to be a part of such a whole as is implied in these phrases, namely, an «unum per se»? If we are to understand that his notion of part has a wider range than this, of what worth is his «enthymema»?

The whole of any society or of the universe is but an accidental unity.—BC, 56. When St. Thomas calls the intellectual creature a part of society, a part of the universe, or a part when compared with the divine good, he is obviously not using the term «part» in the sense in which it is understood in the article referred to by Father Eschmann, i.e. as part of an unum per se. Yet my Opponent allows the person to be a part in this latter, strictly totalitarian sense which contradicts the very nature of any person no matter how imperfect and limited. The reader will recall his argument:

Ratio partis contrahitur persone. Hence, Jacques Maritain concludes, the person, qua person, is not a part of society; and if a person is such a part, this «being part» will not be based upon the metaphysical formality and precision of «being person».—DM, 205.

Since the argument calls for a consistent meaning of the term «part», and since the «part» of the antecedens means «part of an unum per se», «to be a part of society» must mean «to be a part of an unum per se». When my Opponent attempts to show just how obvious is his conclusion, he merely makes more clear his own error:

Maritain's conclusion is evident. Its necessity and intelligibility are exactly the same as the necessity and intelligibility of the following inferences: Act as such means pure and limitless perfection. Hence, if there is a limited or participated act, this limitation will not pertain to this act, qua act, but qua mixed with potency. Or again: The intellect as such is not capable of error. Hence, if there is an intellectual being which errs, this will not happen to it, insofar as it is an intellect but insofar as it is something else.—DM, 205.

A person, then, may be rendered capable of being «such a part of society» by reason of some limitation. This is to say that a person, by some limitation, can be that which is contrary to the very nature of person; that is, a person, while person, can also be non-person. Does my Opponent realize that what is contrary to the very nature of a thing can in no case belong to it? It is for that very reason we hold no person, however imperfect, can possibly be a part in the sense in which St. Thomas uses the term in the passage cited by Father Eschmann.

But let us suppose for a moment that my Opponent is taking the notion of part in all its amplitude—which he decidedly could not do without destroying his own argument or distorting the meaning of the littera Sancti Thomæ. Even then, it would be very true that no person could be a part because of his being a person, for, if «to be a part» were of the very nature of person, every person would necessarily be a part, including the Divine

1. «Sciendum est autem, quod hoc totum, quod est civilis multitudo, vel domestica familia, habet solum unitatem ordinis, secundum quam non est aliquid simpliciter unum. Et ideo pars eius totius, potest habere operationem, que non est operatio totius, sicut miles in exercitu habet operationem que non est totius exercitus. Habet nihilominus et ipsum totum aliquam operationem, que non est totius exercitus partium, sed totius, puta conflictus totius exercitus. Et tractus habet operatio multitudinis trahentium navem. Non autem ad eandem scientiam pertinet consideratio totius, quod habet solum ordinis unitatem, et partes ipsius.—In J. Ethicorum, lect. 1, (ed. Pirotta) n.5.

Persons. But granted no person is a part merely because a person, it surely does not follow that the created person, who is essentially and inalienably a finite person, cannot be a part secundum hoc ipsum quod est. What my Opponent overlooks is that the concept of person is an analogical concept, just as much as the concepts of act and of intellect. If his argument is to be at all conclusive, he must maintain that we created, finite persons do indeed possess the pure and limitless perfection of the person who is not a part; that insofar as we are in act, we possess the pure and limitless perfection of pure actuality. There is not the slightest doubt that this is what Father Eschmann must hold if his antecedens is to lead to his conclusion. How else could the pure and limitless perfection of personality, which precludes being a part in any real sense, and which is proper to the Divine Persons, have anything to do, in this connection with the persons that we are? Logically, he has no alternative. He must conceive the potency and limitation which make us finite beings and finite persons, as adventitious to pure actuality and pure personality. In this respect, that which was pure actuality should now become subject; and since it would have to be the subject of a being substantially one, it would have to be pure subject, that is, pure potentiality. In other words, if he carried through the incapable implications of his argumentation, my Opponent would be faced with something like the position of David of Limant «qui stultissime posuit Deum esse materiam primam»².

And now we shall return to Father Eschmann's criticism of my «Thomistic proof» of a «revolving» statement.

Let us here for the moment consider the second part of this thesis, viz. the statement regarding the intrinsic common good of the universe and its relation to the intellectual beings or persons. Even Professor De K. somehow seems to feel that his is a «revolving» statement (cf. p. 30). He, therefore, makes every effort to be very careful in establishing a Thomistic proof of it. In fact, he asks, is not the same statement repeatedly implied in St. Thomas' discussions of the question: What is the end God has proposed to Himself in the production of all things? Four texts are cited by the author. Let us here reproduce, in Latin, the first two, taken from Contra Gentiles, III, 64; they will sufficiently show in what specific set of Thomistic texts Professor De K. has found a proof, satisfying to his mind, of his assertion. The italicized sentences are not held worthy of quotation, by the author:—DM, 187-188.

My Opponent then quotes the two paragraphs in question. The italicized sentence completing the first paragraph is:

Ipsae igitur Deus omnia suo intellectu et voluntate gubernat.

The italicized sentence completing the second is:

Est igitur gubernator ipsius.

Just what did I want to prove by these texts? It is important to note that Father Eschmann opens his criticism by assailing «the second part of this thesis». Whether he uses this procedure willfully or not, it does obscure the issue and create a convenient confusion. Do I seek to prove that the order of the universe is the most profound and absolutely ultimate good of persons? On the contrary, I had spoken in the early part of my essay of this ultimate good of persons as being the absolute separated and extrinsic good of the universe, which is God. In «the second part of this thesis», however, I consider persons as parts of the universe, and I enquire what is their greatest good as parts of the universe. Now this is merely to ask what is the greatest good that God produces and that most perfectly imitates His own goodness. St. Thomas' answer leaves no doubt. Here are the two paragraphs I quoted (BC 28-29; 175) from Contra Gentiles III, c. 64, to which I now add the concluding sentences which Father Eschmann says I hold «not . . . worthy of quotation»:

Deus res omnes in esse produxit, non ex necessitate naturæ, sed per intellectum et voluntatem. Intellectus autem et voluntatis ipsius non potest esse alius finis ultimus nisi bonitas eius, ut scilicet cum rebus communicet, sicut ex premissis (ibid. I, cap. 75 sq.) apparet. Res autem participant divinum bonitatem per modum similitudinis, in quantum ipse sunt bonæ. Id autem quod est maxima bonum in rebus creatis, est bonum ordinis universi, quod est maxime perfectior, ut philosophus dicit (XII Metaph., x, 1; 1075a); cui etiam consonat Scriptura divina, Gen. I, cum dicitur (vers. 31), Vidit Deus cuncta que fecerat, et erat valde bona, cum de singulis operibus dixisset simpliciter quod erant bona. Bonum igitur ordinis rerum causatarum a Deo est id quod est præcipue volitum et causatum a Deo. Nihil autem aliud est gubernare aliqua quam eis ordinem imponere. Ipse igitur Deus omnia suo intellectu et voluntate gubernat.

Amplius. In unumquodque intendens aliquam finem, magis curat de eo quod est proprius finis ultimi; quia hoc etiam est finis aliorum. Ultimus autem finis divina voluntatis est bonitas ipsius, cui propinquissimum in rebus creatis est bonum ordinis totius universi, sicut ad ipsam ordinatur, sicut ad finem, omne particulare bonum tantum illius rei, sicut minus perfectum ordinatur ad id quod est perfectius, unde et quælibet pars intendit esse propter suam bonum. Id igitur quod maxime curat Deus in rebus creatis, est ordo universi. Est igitur gubernator ipsius.

How the omission of those last sentences makes me guilty of my Opponent's practice of reading «St. Thomas with scissors and paste, by cutting the texts out of their literary and historical context and just quoting what, in a particular instance, seems to be suitable» (DM, 189), I fail to see. I quoted that part of the text which shows that St. Thomas expressly teaches the order of the universe to be the greatest good which God produces and that it is the præcipue volitum. It is from this truth that St. Thomas infers: Ipsae igitur Deus omnia suo intellectu et voluntate gubernat; Est igitur gubernator ipsius (ordinis universi). In stating that these sentences are not held worthy of quotation, by the author» (DM, 188) my Opponent may distract attention, but his accusation should not blind the critical reader to the fact that he is distorting the perspective by stressing those last sentences, as if the premises of St. Thomas' conclusion did not properly and immediately belong to the question I undertook to treat, or as if the truth of the premises were irrelevant to their conclusion.

Before examining Father Eschmann's interpretation of these quotations, let me recall again the latter four of the six texts I quoted to support the doctrine that, of all created goods, the good of the universe is the greatest. The third is taken from Ia, q. 47, a. 1: Utrum rerum multitudo et distinctio sit a Deo.

... Distinctio rerum et multitudo est ex intentione primi agentis, quod est Deus. Produxit enim res in esse propter suam bonitatem communicandam creaturis, et per eas representandam. Et quia per unam creaturam sufficienter representari non potest, producit nullas creaturas et diversas, ut quod deest uni ad representandam divinam bonitatem, suppleatur ex alia: nam bonitas que in Deo est simpliciter et uniformiter, in creaturis est multipliciter et divisim. Unde perfectus participat divinam bonitatem, et representat eam, totam universam, quam alia quaecunque creatura.—BC, 29, 175, n.31.

The fourth text was taken from Ia, q.15, a.2, where St. Thomas proves that God has an idea of the order of the whole universe, because the bonum ordinis universi is the optimum in rebus existens.

In quolibet effectu illud quod est ultimus finis, proprie est intentum a principali agente, sicut ordo exercitus a duce. Illud autem quod est optimum in rebus existens est bonum ordinis universi, ut patet per Philosophum in XII Metaph. Ordo igitur universi est proprie a Deo intentus, et non per accidens proveniens secundum successionem agentium. . . . Sed . . . ipse ordo universi est per se creatus ab eo, et intentus ab ipso.—BC, 29; 176, n.32.

In the fifth text St. Thomas proves (Contra Gentes, II, c.39) that the order of the parts of the universe and their distinction is the end of the production of the universe.

Id quod est bonum et optimum in effectu, est finis productionis ipsius. Sed bonum et optimum universi consistit in ordine partium eius ad invicem, qui sine distinctione esse non potest: per hunc enim ordinem universum in sua totalitate constituitur, quae est optimum ipsius. Ipse igitur ordo partium universi et distinctio earum est finis productionis universi.—BC, 30; 176, n.33.

From this St. Thomas further concludes: «non est igitur distinctio rerum a casu». These words I did not quote, because we are concerned with whether or not the good of the universe is the greatest of all created goods, and not with the various conclusions that must be drawn from this principle. However, the manifold conclusions St. Thomas does draw from this fundamental truth illustrate its importance and fecundity.

The sixth text is taken from the Q. D. de Spirituibus Creaturis, q. un., a.8, where St. Thomas shows (secunda ratio) that the separated substances, occupying the suprema pars universi, constitute a per se order, differing in species, because, being the superior parts of the universe, they must have a greater participation in the good of the universe, which is its order.

Manifestum est enim quod duplex est bonum universi; quoddam separatum, scilicet Deus, qui est sicut dux in exercitu; et quoddam in ipsis rebus, et hoc est ordo partium universi, sicut ordo partium exercitus est bonum exercitus. Unde Apostolus dicit Rom. xiii, 1: Quae a Deo sunt, ordinata sunt. Oportet autem quod superiores universi partes magis de bono universi participent, quod est ordo. Perfectius autem participant ordinem ea in quibus est ordo per se, quam ea in quibus est ordo per accidens tantum.—BC, 33; 176, n.35.

My Opponent states that the group of texts involving this principle is a very large one. In view of his interpretation, we shall quote a few more.

Id quod est optimum in rebus causatis, reducit ut in primam causam in id quod est optimum in causis: oportet enim effectus proportionales esse causis. Optimum autem in omnibus entibus causatis est ordo universi, in quo bonum universi consistit: sicut et in rebus humanis bonum gentis est divinus quam bonum unius (I Ethic., II, 8, 1094b). Oportet igitur ordinem universi sicut in causam propriam reducere in Deum, quem supra (lib. I, cap. 41) ostendimus esse summum bonum. Non igitur rerum distinctio, in qua ordo consistit universi, causatur ex causis secundis, sed magis ex intentione causae primae.

Adhuc. Absurdum videtur id quod est optimum in rebus reducere sicut in causam in rerum defectum. Optimum autem in rebus causatis est distinctio et ordo ipsarum, ad ostensum est (arg. prac. et cap. 39). Inconveniens igitur est dicere quod talis distinctio ex hoc causetur quod secunde causae deficient a simplicitate causae primae.

Item. In omnibus causis agentibus ordinatis, ubi agit propter finem, oportet quod fines causarum secundarum sint propter finem causae primae: sicut finis militaris et equestris et frenaticus est propter finem civilis. Processus autem entium a primo ente est per actionem ordinatam ad finem: cum sit per intellectum, ut ostensum est (cap. 24); intellectus autem omnis propter finem agit. Si igitur in productione rerum sunt alique causae secunde, oportet quod fines earum et actiones sint propter finem causae primae, qui est ultimus finis in rebus causatis. Hoc autem est distinctio et ordo partium universi, quae est quasi ultima forma. Non igitur est distinctio in rebus et ordo propter actiones secundarum causarum, sed magis actiones secundarum causarum sunt propter ordinem et distinctionem in rebus constituendam.

Adhuc. Si distinctio partium universi et ordo earum est proprius effectus causae primae, quasi ultima forma et optimum in universo, oportet rerum distinctionem et ordinem esse in intellectu causae primae: . . . 1.

Quanto enim aliquid est melius in effectibus, tanto est prius in intentione agentis. Optimum autem in rebus creatis est perfectio universi, quae consistit in ordine distinctarum rerum: in omnibus enim perfectio totius praevaleat perfectioni singularium partium. Igitur diversitas rerum ex principali intentione primi agentis provenit, non ex diversitate meritum².

Item, cum bonum totius sit melius quam bonum partium singularium, non est optimum facteris dividere bonum totius ut aliquarum partium augeat bonitatem: non enim adificator fundamento tribuit eam bonitatem quam tribuit tecto, ne domum faciat ruinosa. Facto igitur omnium, Deus non faceret totum universum in suo genere optimum, et faceret omnes partes aequales: quia multi gradus bonitatis in universo deessent, et sic esset imperfectum³.

Bonum ordinis universi nobilitas est quae libet parte universi: cum partes singulae ordinem ad bonum ordinis qui est in toto sicut ad finem, ut per Philosophum patet, in XII Metaphysicae (cap. x, 1; 1075a). Si igitur Deus cognoscat aliquam aliam naturam nobilem, maxime cognoscat ordinem universi. Hic autem cognoscat non potest nisi cognoscatur et nobilitate et virtute, in quorum distantibus et habitudibus ordo universi consistit. Relinquitur igitur quod Deus cognoscat non solum nobilitate, sed etiam ea quae villa reputantur⁴.

Si Deus cognoscat aliquid aliud a se, maxime cognoscat quod est optimum. Hoc autem est ordo universi, ad quem sicut ad finem omnia particularia bona ordinantur⁵.

Providentia divina quibusdam rebus necessitatem imponit: non autem omnibus, ut quidam crediderunt. Ad providentiam enim pertinet ordinare res in finem. Post bonitatem autem divinam, quae est finis a rebus separatus, principate bonum in ipsis rebus existens, est perfectio universi: quae quidem non esset, si non omnes gradus essent inventur in rebus. Unde ad divinam providentiam pertinet omnes gradus eorum producere. Et ideo, quibusdam effectibus preparavit causas necessarias, ut necessario evenirent; quibusdam vero causas contingentes, ut evenirent contingenter, secundum conditionem proximarum causarum⁶.

Malum quod in corruptione rerum aliquarum consistit, reducit in Deum sicut in causam. Et hoc patet tam in naturalibus quam in voluntariis. Dicitum est enim quod aliquod agens, inquantum sua virtute producat aliquam formam ad quam sequitur corruptio et defectus, causat sua virtute illam corruptionem et defectum. Manifestum est autem quod forma quam principaliter Deus intendit in rebus creatis, est bonum ordinis universi. Ordo autem universi requirit, ut supra dictum est, quod quendam sint que deficere possint, et interdum deficiant. Et sic Deus, in rebus causando bonum ordinis universi, ex consequenti, et quasi per accidens, causat corruptiones rerum; secundum illud quod dicitur I Reg. II: Domineus mortificat et vivificat. Sed quod dicitur Sup. I, quod Deus mortem non fecit, intelligitur quasi per se vitantem. Ad autem autem universi, pertinet etiam ordo iustitie, qui requirit ut peccatoribus poena inferatur. Et secundum hoc, Deus est auctor mali quod est poena: non autem mali quod est culpa, ratione supra dicta¹.

Providentia Dei, qua res gubernat, est similis, ut dictum est, art. preced., quibus gubernationibus gubernat domum, et rex civitatem, aut regnum: in quibus gubernationibus hoc est commune, quod bonum commune est eminentius quam bonum singulare; sicut bonum gentis est eminentius quam civitatis vel familie vel persone, ut habetur, in principio Ethic. (cap. II, in fin.). Unde quilibet provisor plus attendit quod communitati conveniat, si sapienter gubernat, quam quid conveniat uni tantum.

Hoc autem quidam non attendentes, considerantes in rebus corruptibilibus aliqua que possent meliora esse secundum seipsa considerata, non attendentes ordinem universi, secundum quem optime collocatur unumquodque in ordine suo, dixerunt ista corruptibilia non gubernari a Deo sed sola incorruptibilia; ex quorum persona dicitur Job, cap. XXII, 14: Nubes latibulum ejus, sicut Deus, neque nosstra considerat; sed circa carnes eorum perambulabat. Hæc autem corruptibilia posterius vel omnino absque gubernatore esse et agi, vel a contrario principio gubernari. Quam opinionem Philosophus in XII Metaphysic. (com. 52 et seq.) reprobat per similitudinem exercitus, in quo invenimus duplicem ordinem: unum, quo exercitus partes ordinantur ad invicem, alium quo ordinantur ad bonum externum, scilicet ad bonum ducis; et ordo ille quo ordinantur partes exercitus ad invicem, est propter illum ordinem quo totus exercitus ordinatur ad ducem; unde si non esset ordo ad ducem, non esset ordo partium exercitus ad invicem. Quantumque ergo multitudinem invenimus ordinatum ad invicem, oportet eam ordinari ad externum principium. Partes autem universi, corruptibiles et incorruptibiles, sunt ad invicem ordinate, non per accidens, sed per se: videmus enim ex corporibus celestibus utilitates provenire in corporibus corruptibilibus vel semper vel in majori parte secundum eundem modum; unde oportet omnia, corruptibilia et incorruptibilia, esse in uno ordine providentiæ principii exterioris, quod est extra universum. Unde Philosophus concludit, quod necesse est ponere in universo unum dominatum et non plures.

Sciendum tamen, quod aliquid providendi dicitur dupliciter: uno modo propter se, alio modo propter alia; sicut in domo propter se providentur ea in quibus essentialiter consistit bonum domus, sicut filii, possessiones, et hujusmodi: alia vero providentur ad horum utilitatem, ut vasa, animalia, et hujusmodi. Et similiter in universo illa propter se providentur in quibus essentialiter consistit perfectio universi; et hæc perpetuitatem habent, sicut et universum perpetuum est. Que vero perpetua non sunt, non providentur nisi propter alium; et ideo substantiæ spirituales et corpora caelestia, que sunt perpetua et secundum speciem, et secundum individuum, sunt provisiva propter se et in specie et in individuo; sed corruptibilia perpetuitatem non possunt habere nisi in specie; unde species ipse sunt provisive propter se, sed individua eorum non sunt provisiva nisi propter perpetuum esse speciei conservandum².

... Quavis res corruptibilis melior esset si incorruptibilitatem haberet, melius tamen est universum quod ex corruptibilibus et incorruptibilibus constat, quam quod ex incorruptibilibus tantum constaret, quia utraque natura bona est, scilicet corruptibilis et incorruptibilis; melius autem est esse duo bona quam unum tantum. Neque multiplicatio individuorum in una natura posset acquirere diversitatem naturarum, cum bonum naturæ, quod est communicabile, præveniat bono individi, quod est singulare³.

These form part of the body of texts I argue from. They prove that according to sound Thomistic doctrine, optimum in omnibus entibus creatis est ordo universi, in quo bonum universi consistit. Now, what does my Opponent have to say about this group of texts?

1. Ia, q. 49, a. 2, c.
2. De Ver., q. 5, a. 3, c.
3. Ibid., ad 3.

... Against Greco-Arabian necessitarianism St. Thomas states that there exists an intelligent and loving Creator, i. e. a personal God and a divine and all-embracing Providence. Were this not so, he argues, the universe would fall apart into so many unconnected and unconnected bits, and it would be impossible to maintain the fact of the order of the universe on whose existence and sublime beauty both the Greeks, and especially the Christian Fathers, have so energetically insisted. In this group of texts—it is a very large one—St. Thomas frequently, and with obvious enjoyment, avails himself of two quotations from Aristotle, viz. (a) bonum commune est divitius... and (b) quod est optimum in rebus existens est bonum universi.^{*} By these citations no proper doctrine on the common good is taught; and still less is anything said about the relations between the common good and the proper good of the intellectual substances. Their impact is clearly to show, against a Greek heresy, that, even in the Greek thinkers themselves, and above all in Aristotle, who was so fondly cherished in the Arabian world, there are principles upon which our way proceed to prove the fact of divine Providence.

This is the group of texts Professor De K. argues from. He should not have done so, because they do not properly and immediately belong to the question he undertook to treat.—DM, 191-2.

In other words, according to Father Eschmann, when St. Thomas says that God governs the order of the universe and bestows upon it His greatest care (maxime curat) because it is the maxime bonum in rebus causatis, the præcipue volitum et causatum, and because the good of the order of the universe is the propinquissimum in rebus creatis to His own goodness, cum ad ipsam ordinatur, sicut ad finem, omne particulare bonum hujusmodi alius rei, sicut minus perfectum ad id quod est perfectum, he does not really mean the reasons he gives to be taken as the true reasons. When St. Thomas exposes these reasons, and does so in language so unmistakable that even a reader who finds his view unacceptable must grant the obvious significance of these passages, still we are not to take the Anglican Doctor as meaning what he says. What he does mean, my Opponent explains, is that if there were no all-embracing Providence, the universe would fall apart into so many unconnected and unconnected bits, and it would be impossible to maintain the fact of the order of the universe on whose existence and sublime beauty both the Greeks, and especially the Christian Fathers, have so energetically insisted.—DM, 191.

Hence, according to my Opponent, the reason St. Thomas actually gives in the texts concerned, namely that the order of the universe is what is best in all creation, is not a universal, metaphysical, true reason at all, nor does the quotation from Genesis, I, 31, express a theological principle. The true reason is the mere fact of the order of the universe on whose existence and sublime beauty both the Greeks, and especially the Christian Fathers, have so energetically insisted.—DM, 191.

In St. Thomas' arguments it is of no importance that this order of the universe—and by universe is meant the whole of creation and not just the cosmos—is what is best in all creation. True, he does infer: «Id igitur quod maxime curat Deus in rebus creatis est ordo universi», but that, presumably, is merely because he had used a premise designed to achieve a greater impact against a Greek heresy. Likewise, when St. Thomas declares that the bonum ordinis universi is the good which is closest to the divine goodness, quam ordinatur ad ipsum sicut ad finem omne particulare bonum huius vel illius rei, sicut minus perfectum ordinatur ad id quod est perfectius, the omne bonum particulare here distinguished from the bonum ordinis universi, has no more to do with the proper doctrine on the common good than the bonum commune of St. Thomas' quotations from the Ethics, I, c.1, and from the Metaphysics, XII, c.10.

In this group of texts—it is a very large one—St. Thomas frequently, and with obvious enjoyment, avails himself of two quotations from Aristotle, viz., (a) bonum commune est divinum . . . and, (b) quod est optimum in rebus existens est bonum universi. By these citations no proper doctrine on the common good is taught; and still less is anything said about the relations between the common good and the proper good of the intellectual substances.—DM, 191-192.

Indeed, how could the intellectual substances be included here unless quælibet res or quælibet creatura actually meant quælibet res or quælibet creatura? The addicts of the Historical Point of View know better: St. Thomas is not concerned here with strictly doctrinal truth, but with creating an impact against a Greek heresy, even at the cost of making false or misleading statements.

Their impact is clearly to show, against a Greek heresy, that, even in the Greek thinkers themselves, and above all in Aristotle, who was so fondly cherished in the Arabian world, there are principles upon which one may proceed to prove the fact of divine Providence.—DM, 192.

Is my Opponent insinuating that St. Thomas uses the wiles of sophistry? Of course not! For, is it not true that the quotations from Aristotle are actually in Aristotle? One cannot contradict historical fact. St. Thomas is merely using the true facts of history to get results. Whether or not what Aristotle actually held is also true, is another matter.

Father Eschmann says:

By these citations no proper doctrine on the common good is taught; and still less is anything said about the relations between the common good and the proper good of the intellectual substances.—DM, 191-192.

And why not? No justification is necessary, for it is only too obvious that the term bonum could not mean bonum i.e. perfectivum alterius; and it is just as obvious that the good to which ordinatur, sicut ad finem (and therefore as to what perfects), omne particulare bonum huius vel illius rei, sicut minus perfectum ad id quod est perfectum, is a good which belongs to one creature to the exclusion of the other, and by no means to the one and the other as a good which is more perfect than their exclusive proper good. Why? Because Father Eschmann says so. It is for the same unquestionable reason that the following text (quoted BC, 15-16; 172, nn.13,14) has nothing to do with the common good, nor with the relations between the common good and the proper good of the intellectual substances:

Cum affectio sequatur cognitionem; quanto cognitio est universalior, tanto affectio eam sequens magis respicit commune bonum; et quanto cognitio est magis particularis, tanto affectio ipsam sequens magis respicit privatum bonum; unde et in nobis privata dilectio ex cognitione sensitiva exoritur: dilectio vero communis et absoluti boni ex cognitione intellectiva. Quia ergo angeli quanto sunt altiores, tanto habent sententiam magis universalem . . . ideo eorum dilectio maxime respicit commune bonum. Magis ergo diligunt se invicem, si specie differunt, quod magis pertinet ad perfectionem universi, quam si specie conveniunt, quod pertinet ad bonum privatum unius speciei.

IV. WHY DID GOD MAKE THINGS MANY?

The texts I quoted in this connection were to prove that «dans l'univers même», the greatest perfection of the created persons is the good of the universe. The question of the relation of the intellectual creature to God as He is in Himself apart from the universe, had already been treated in substance. The reader will recall Father Eschmann's complaint:

Will it be granted that it is inadmissible to read St. Thomas with scissors and paste, by cutting the texts out of their literary and historical context and just quoting what, in a particular instance, seems to be suitable? Will it be granted that, if St. Thomas has explicitly stated and solved a given problem, a Thomist worthy of that name is obliged to take account of this fact and can not afford to refer to some other texts which either have nothing to do with the problem or, at best, refer to it in a distant and mediate fashion?—DM, 189-190.

Faithful to his normal practice, my Opponent again proceeds to do just that. Not only does he cloud the distinction between the two questions (that of the relation of the person to the ultimate good and that of his relation to the intrinsic good of the universe) but he neglects to inform the reader that I had formulated and answered the very objection he levels against me.—BC, 63-64. Just what is the problem we are to have in mind when Father Eschmann says: «Here is the problem as stated by St. Thomas» (DM, 190), is conveniently undetermined, but let us allow him to quote it:

Videtur quod imago Dei inveniat in irrationabilibus creaturis . . . [for, and this is the third argumentum in contrarium] quanto aliquid est magis perfectum in bonitate, tanto magis est Deo simile. Sed totum universum est perfectius in bonitate quam homo, quia etsi bona sint singula, tamen simul omnia dicuntur «valde bona», Gen. I (St. Augustine). Ergo totum universum est ad imaginem Dei et non solum homo.

The objection is taken from Ia, q. 93, a.2. The answer to this objection is:

Universum est perfectius in bonitate quam intellectualis creatura: extensiva et diffusiva. Sed intensive et collective similitudo divine perfectionis magis invenitur in intellectuali creatura, que est capax summi boni.—Val dicendum, quod pars non dividitur contra totum, sed contra aliam partem. Unde cum dicitur quod sola natura intellectualis est ad imaginem Dei, non excluditur quin universum secundum aliquam sui partem sit ad imaginem Dei, sed excluduntur alie partes universi.—DM, 190.

If this quotation is directed against me, it must mean that the greatest created good of the person—of the person viewed within the order of the universe, is not that which was said to be closest to the divine good, namely, the order of the universe itself whose principal parts are the intellectual substances in all their manifold and variety; rather the greatest good of the person is held to be each individual person himself, taken separately, so that each and every one of them is, absolutely speaking, a greater good than any or all of the other persons. Each person, then, because he is in the image of God, is a better created good than any and all of the other created persons who are also in the image of God. If this is not what Father Eschmann means, where is his objection?

1. De Spirit. Creat., a. 8, ad 5.

Immediately following the quotation of St. Thomas' answer, Father Eschmann adds:

St. Thomas solution of the problem is so clear, so complete, and so perfectly balanced that it needs no explanation.—DM, 190.

Let us see, then, just how simple this matter is.

Why did God make things many and varied? Let us consider a few texts on this subject.

Cum enim omne agens intendat suam similitudinem in effectum inducere secundum quod effectus capere potest, tanto hoc agit perfectius quanto agens perfectius est: patet enim quod quanto aliquid est calidius, tanto facit magis calidum; et quanto est aliquis melior artifex, formam artis perfectius inducit in materiam. Deus autem est perfectissimus agens. Suam igitur similitudinem in rebus creatis ad Deum pertinet inducere perfectissime, quantum naturae creatae convenit. Sed perfectam Dei similitudinem non possunt consequi res creatae secundum unam solam speciem creaturæ: quia, cum causa excedat effectum, quod est in causa simpliciter et univocum, in effectu vniuersali compositum et multipliciter, nisi effectus pertingat ad speciem causae; quod in proposito dici non potest, non enim creatura possit esse Deo aequalis. Oportuit igitur esse multipliciter et varietatem in rebus creatis, ad hoc quod inueniretur in eis Dei similitudo perfecta secundum modum suum¹.

Item. Plura bona uno bono fructo sunt meliora: habent enim hoc et adhuc amplius. Omnis autem creatura bonitas fructa est: est enim deiciens ab infinita Dei bonitate. Perfectus est igitur uniuersum creaturam si sunt plures, quam si esset unus tantum gradus rerum. Summo autem bono competet facere quod melius est. Ergo conueniens ei fuit ut plures faceret creaturarum gradus².

Amplius. Operi a summo bono artifice factio non debuit deesse summa perfectio. Sed bonum ordinis diuersorum est maius quolibet illorum ordinatum per se simpliciter est enim formale respectu singularium, sicut perfectio totius respectu partium. Non debuit ergo bonum ordinis operi Dei deesse. Hoc autem bonum esse non potest si diuersitas et inaequalitas creaturarum non fuisset. Est igitur diuersitas et inaequalitas in rebus creatis non a casu (cap. 30); non ex materiae diuersitate (cap. 40); non propter interuentum aliquarum causarum (capp. 41-43), vel meritorum (cap. 44); sed ex propria Dei intentione perfectionem creaturae dare volens qualem possibile erat eam habere. Hinc est quod dicitur Gen. 1, 31: Vidit Deus cuncta quae fecerat, et erant valde bona: cum de singulis dixisset quod sunt bona. Quia singula quidem sunt in suis naturis bona: simul autem omnia, valde bona, propter ordinem uniuersi, quae est ultima et nobilissima perfectio in rebus³.

Ostensum enim est quod Deus per suam providentiam omnia ordinat in diuinam bonitatem sicut in finem (cap. 64); non autem hoc modo quod suae bonitati aliquid per ea quae fiunt accrescat, sed ut similitudo suae bonitatis, quantum possibile est, imprimatur in rebus (capp. 18 sq.). Quia vero omnem creatam substantiam a perfectione diuinae bonitatis defendere necesse est, ut perfectius diuinae bonitatis similitudo rebus communicetur, oportet esse diuersitatem in rebus, ut quod perfecte ab uno aliquo representari non potest, per diuersa diuersimode perfectiori modo represententur: nam et homo, cum mentis conceptum uno uocati uerbo videt sufficienter exprimi non posse, uerba diuersimode multiplicat ad exprimentam per diuersa suae mentis conceptionem. Et in hoc etiam diuinae perfectionis eminentia considerari potest, quod perfecta bonitas, quae in Deo est univocum et simpliciter, in creaturis esse non potest nisi secundum modum diuersum et per plura. Res autem per hoc diuersae sunt, quod formas habent diuersas, a quibus speciem sortiuntur. Sic igitur ex fine sumitur ratio diuersitatis formarum in rebus⁴.

1. Contra Gentes, II, c. 45.

2. Ibid.

3. Ibid.

4. Ibid., III, c. 97.

In praedicto autem ordine, secundum quem ratio diuinae providentiae attenditur, primum esse diximus diuinam bonitatem, quae ultimam finem, qui est primum principium in agendis, debent uero rerum immutabilitatem; ad quam consistendum necesse est gradus diuersos in formis et materiis, et agentibus et participantibus, et actiuius et accidentibus esse. Sic ut ergo prima ratio diuinae providentiae simpliciter est diuina bonitas, ita prima ratio in creaturis est carum immutabilitas, ad cuius instauratorem et conservationem omnia alia ordinari uidentur. Et secundum hoc rationabiliter videtur esse a Beato dictum, in principio suo Arithmetice (lib. I, cap. II), quod omnia quaecumque a primarum rerum natura constituta sunt, ex numerorum evidentia ratione esse formata¹.

Uterque enim error scilicet Manicheorum et Origenis ordinem uniuersi praedixere uidetur in sua consideratione, considerando tantummodo singulas partes eius. In ipso enim ordine uniuersi potuisset eius ratio apparere, quod ab uno principio, nulla meritorum differentia praecedente, oportuit diuersos gradus creaturarum insitum, ad hoc quod uniuersum esset completum (representante uniuerso per multiplices et uarios modos creaturam quod in diuina bonitate simpliciter et indistincte praesistit) sicut et ipsa perfectio domus et humani corporis diuersitatem partium requirit. Neutrum autem eorum esset completum si omnes partes unius conuulsiuiter existerent; sicut si omnes partes humani corporis essent oculos, aliarum enim partium deessent officia. Et similiter si omnes partes domus essent tectum, domus completum non et finem suum non consequeretur; ut scilicet ab inuicibus et eumactibus defendere posset. Sic igitur dicendum est, quod ab uno, primo multitudine et diuersitate creaturarum processit, non propter materiam necessitatem, nec propter potentiae limitationem, nec propter bonitatem, nec propter habitus obligationem; sed ex ordine sapientiae, ut in diuersitate creaturarum perfectio consisteret uniuersi².

Hence, a single creature, unless it were equal to God, could never sufficiently express that which exists in God simpliciter et univocum. If, then, according to God's actual design, the fullness of diuine perfection is to be more profoundly represented by His work, diuine wisdom must bring this about "perfectissime, quantum naturae creatae conuenit", through multiplicity and variety. Therefore, it is what is realized in creation compositum et multipliciter which imitates most perfectly what is in God simpliciter et univocum. Hence, to deem secondary the perfection which in creation is accomplished by way of composition and multiplicity, is to deny value to that which most perfectly imitates what is in God simpliciter et univocum.

In the context of this general problem, it would be true to say that, intensive, any single creature represents more perfectly the uniqueness of anything it has in common with God. Intensive, any single created intelligible species represents more perfectly than a multiplicity of species the unique intelligible species which is God's essence. However, the superabundance of whatever exists in God simpliciter et univocum, is more perfectly expressed by what exists in creation multipliciter et diuersim. The inexhaustible richness of the diuine intelligible species is, absolutely speaking, more perfectly represented by the multiplicity of created species. Thus, if the texts already quoted have any meaning, the single creature's imitation of God by intension could not possibly be more perfect absolutely than that realized by the manifold to which it belongs, unless a creature could be equal to God in perfection. This St. Thomas brings out clearly in his answers to the objections of De Potentia, q. 3, a. 16, from which our last quotation was taken.

1. Contra Gentes, III, c. 97.

2. De Potentia, q. 3, a. 16, c. See also Compendium Theologiae, cc. 72, 73, 102.

22. Præterea, quidquid Deus facit, est unum. Ergo ab eo non est nisi unum; et ita ipse non erit causa multitudinis.

Ad viresumsecundum dicendum, quod licet quidquid Deus facit, in se sit unum, tamen hæc unitas, ut dictum est, non remouet omnium multitudinem, sed manet illa cuius unum est pars.

My Opponent's simplistic understanding of the terms intensive and extensive shows itself to be a defence of the doctrines St. Thomas consistently attacks, namely, that the ordered manifold of creation is, at best, only secondarily intended by God. Of course, intensive, any indivisible part of a creature is, as to the formality «invisible», a better imitation of divine simplicity than any created whole; in this respect, even the per se unity of any single created being is inferior to that of any of its parts. However, absolutely speaking, apud nos composita sunt meliora simplicibus, quia perfectio bonitatis creaturæ non inuenitur in uno simplici, sed in multis. Sed perfectio diuine bonitatis inuenitur in uno simplici. . . .

The imperfection of intensive imitation is compensated by extension, by the manifold. By manifold, we do not mean the mere homogeneous multiplicity of predicamental quantity; nor do we mean that the manifold of creation is an end insofar as it is a manifold.

1. Ia, q. 3, a. 7, ad 2.
 2. The latitude of the terms intensive and extensive may be shown from the following text of St. Thomas, I Sent. d. 44, q. 1, a. 2, in answer to the question: Utrum Deus esse potest in multis.
 Respondeo dicendum, quod secundum Philosophum, in XI Metaphys., text. 32, bonum uniuersum consistit in duplici ordine; scilicet in ordine partium uniuersum ad inuicem, et in ordine totius uniuersum ad finem, qui est ipse Deus; sicut etiam est in exercitiis bonorum, et in ordine totius uniuersum ad finem, et est ordo ad bonum bonorum exercitium ad inuicem, secundum diuersa officia, et est ordo ad bonum bonorum exercitium ad finem, et est ordo ad finem, propter quod est primum considerandus, quod est victoria; et hic ordo est in partibus uniuersum ad inuicem, potest considerari, vel quantum ad partes ipsas ordinatas, vel quantum ad inuicem, vel per additionem, plurius partium, ut scilicet creatorum nature alio modo, et implerentur multi gradus bonitatis qui possunt esse, cum etiam inter summas creaturam et Deum infinita distantia sit; et sic Deus melius uniuersum facere potest, sic nec penitus esset idem, uniuersum se haberet ad hoc sicut totum ad partem, per modum quantitatis discrete, nec penitus diuersum; et hæc additio bonitatis esse per modum quantitatis discrete. Vel potest intelligi fieri melius quasi intensiue, hoc mutatis omnibus partibus eius in melius, quia si aliquæ partes meliores sint, alii non melioratis, non esset tanta bonitas ordinis; sicut patet in citata, ubi si omnes choræ meliorantur, fit dulcor harmonia, sed quibusdam tantum in melius, fit dissonantia. Hæc autem melioratio omnium partium, vel potest intelligi secundum bonitatem accidentalem, et sic potest esse talis melioratio a Deo in partibus eisdem partibus et eodem uniuerso; et sic secundum bonitatem essentialis, et sic etiam esset Deo possibilis, qui infinitas alias species versare potest, sicut patet. Si autem accipiamus ipse ordo partium, sic non potest esse melior per modum quantitatis discrete, nisi fieret additio in partibus uniuersum, quia in uniuerso nihil est inordinatum, sed intensiue potest esse melior manifeste eisdem partibus quantum ad ordinem qui sequitur bonitatem accidentalem quantum enim aliquid in maius bonum redundat, tanto ordo melior est. Sed ordo qui sequitur bonitatem essentialis, non potest esse melior, nisi fierent alie partes ipsius finis; sicut Deo nihil melius esse potest, ut scilicet in meliorem inuenirentur, et sic secundum ordo in finem, ex eo quod propinquius ad finem se habuerit, quanto similitudinem quod cresceret bonitas partium uniuersum et ordo carnis ab inuicem, potest meliorari diuina bonitatis magis consequentur, quæ est secundum finem.

Ad sextum dicendum, quod quantumuis angelus absolute sit melior quam lapis, tamen utraq; natura est melior quam angelus autum; et ideo melius est uniuersum in quo sunt angeli et alie res, quam ubi essent angeli tantum, quia perfectio uniuersum attenditur essentialiter secundum aduentum naturarum, quibus implentur diuersi gradus bonitatis, et non secundum multiplicationem individuorum in una natura.

1. Sextodecimo queritur utrum ab uno primo possit procedere multitudine. Et videtur quod non. Sicut enim Deus est per se bonum, et per consequens summum bonum; ita est per se et in quantum est bonum, non potest procedere nisi bonum. Ergo nec ab eo procedere potest nisi unum.

Ad primum ergo dicendum, quod sicut Deus est unus, ita et unum productum, non solum quia unumquodque in se est unum, sed etiam quia omnia quodammodo sunt unum perfectum, quæ quidem unitas diuersitatem partium requirit, ut ostensum est.

2. Præterea, sicut bonum conuertitur cum ente, ita et unum. Sed in his que sunt entia, oportet attendi assimilationem creaturæ ad Deum, ut supra, art. præcedenti, dictum est. Ergo sicut in bonitate, ita et in unitate oportet Deo creaturam assimilari, ut scilicet sit una ab uno.

Ad secundum dicendum, quod creatura assimilatur Deo in unitate, in quantum unaqueque in se una est, et in quantum omnes unum sunt unitate ordinis, ut dictum est.

5. Præterea, unusquisque effectus est aliquam propriam causam accipere. Sed impossibile est unum esse proprium multorum. Ergo impossibile est quod unum sit causa multitudinis.

Ad quintum dicendum, quod appropriatio causæ ad effectum attenditur secundum assimilationem effectus ad causam. Assimilatio autem creaturæ ad Deum attenditur secundum hoc quod creatura implet id quod ipsa est in intellectu et voluntate Dei; sicut artificia simulantur artifici in quantum in eis exprimitur forma artis, et ostendunt voluntatis artificis de eorum constitutione. Nam sicut res naturalis agit per formam suam, ita artifex per suum intellectum et voluntatem. Sic igitur Deus propria causa est unusquisque creaturæ, in quantum intelligit et vult unamquamque creaturam esse. Quod autem dicitur idem non posse esse plurius proprium, intelligendum est quando fit propriatio per adæquationem; quod in proposito non contingit.

7. Præterea, oportet esse conformitatem inter causam et effectum. Sed Deus est omnino unus et simplex. Ergo in creatura, quæ est ejus effectus, nec multitudine nec compositio debet inueniri.

Ad septimum dicendum, quod licet sit quedam similitudo creaturæ ad Deum, non tamen adequatio; unde non oportet, si unitas Dei careat omni multitudine et compositione, quod propter hoc oportet talem esse creaturæ unitatem.

10. Sed dices, quod unitas creaturarum est quodammodo unum secundum ordinem.—Sed contra, effectum oportet assimilari causæ. Sed unitas Dei non est unitas ordinis, quia in Deo non est prius nec posterius, nec superior et inferior. Ergo non sufficit unitas ordinis ad hoc quod ab uno Deo plura possint educi.

Ad decimum dicendum, quod non oportet, sicut dictum est, uniusmodi unitatem esse in creatura et in Deo; licet creatura Deum in unitate imitetur.

12. Præterea, creatura procedit a Deo, non solum sicut effectus a causa efficiente, sed etiam sicut exemplatum ab exemplari. Sed unus exemplatus est unum exemplar proprium. Ergo a Deo non potest procedere nisi una creatura.

Ad decimumsecundum dicendum, quod quando exemplatum perfecte representat exemplari, ab uno exemplari non est nisi unum exemplatum, nisi per accidens, in quantum exemplata materialiter distinguuntur. Creaturæ vero non perfecte imitantur suum exemplar. Unde diuersimode possunt ipsum imitari, et sic esse diuersa exemplata. Perfectus autem modus imitandi est unus tantum; et propter hoc Filius, qui perfecte imitatur Patrem, non potest esse nisi unus.

13. Præterea, Deus est causa rerum per intellectum. Agens autem per intellectum agit per formam sui intellectus. Cum igitur in diuino intellectu non sit nisi una forma, videtur quod ab eo non possit procedere nisi una creatura.

Ad decimumtertium dicendum, quod licet forma intellectus diuini sit una tantum secundum rem, est tamen multiplex ratione secundum diuersos respectus ad creaturam, prout scilicet intelliguntur creaturæ diuersimode formam diuinam intellectus imitari.

18. Præterea, unusquisque agens propter finem, facit effectum suum propinquiore fini quantum potest. Sed Deus producendo creaturam ordinat eam in finem. Ergo facit eam propinquissimam fini quantum potest. Sed hoc non potest nisi uno modo fieri. Ergo Deus non producit nisi unam creaturam.

Ad decimumquartum dicendum, quod ratio illa tenet quando id quod est ad finem potest totaliter et perfecte consequi finem per modum adæquationis; quod in proposito non contingit.

... Nullum agens intendit pluralitatem materialem ut finem: quia materialis multitudo non habet certum terminum, sed de se tendit in infinitum; infinitum autem repugnat rationi finis¹.

Material multiplicity is for the sake of formal multiplicity².

As an intensive imitation of divine perfection, any single term of any manifold is admittedly more perfect than the manifold itself. Yet we cannot afford to take this facile observation as an adequate solution to our problem save at the cost of being led into the trap into which Father Eschmann has fallen. For it must be noted that, whereas any higher term of the formal manifold of creation is a more perfect intensive imitation of divine perfection than an inferior one, the lower groups of the ordered manifold nevertheless approach intensive imitation more perfectly than the higher, in that they have fewer members³. In other words, the more numerous the terms of the manifold, the less perfect it is from the viewpoint of intensive imitation. Hence, with respect to what is in God simpliciter et indivisim, if intensive imitation by the creature were absolutely better than that which is achieved through extension, the universe could not possibly be the praecipue intentum; and since in the higher regions of the universe, the spiritual creatures are more numerous than in the lower, those higher regions would be, absolutely speaking, less perfect than the lower. How would this compare with the doctrine of the texts already quoted? or with that of the following?

... Cum perfectio universi sit illud quod praecipue Deus intendit in creatione rerum, quanto aliqua sunt magis perfecta, tanto in maiori excessu sunt creata a Deo. Sicut autem in corporibus attenditur excessus secundum magnitudinem, ita in rebus incorporeis potest attendi excessus secundum multitudinem. Videmus autem quod corpora incorruptibilia, quae sunt perfectiora inter corpora, excedunt quasi incomparabiliter secundum multitudinem corpora corruptibilia: nam tota spheera activorum et passivorum est aliquid modicum respectu corporum caelestium. Unde rationabile est quod substantiae immateriales excedant secundum multitudinem substantias materiales, quasi incomparabiliter.

Father Eschmann's understanding of the distinction between intensive and extensive destroys the Thomistic doctrine concerning the reason why God made things many and varied. Like the Manicheans and Origen, «ordinem universi praeterite videtur in sua consideratione, considerando tantummodo singulas partes eius». In truth, the extensive perfection of the universe is not just a purely quantitative addition; extension is not intended for the mere sake of numerosity. The varied manifold of creation, its unity of order, is intended per se as the only manner in which what is in God simpliciter et unite can be more fully represented in His work. The divine «simpliciter et unite» is the principle and term of the created «compositae et multipliciter». In comparison with the fullness of what is in God simpliciter et indivisim, the manifold of creation as a whole is more profoundly one, than any single part. «... sicut Deus est unus, ita et unum produxit, non solum quia unumquodque est unum, sed etiam quia omnia quodammodo sunt unum perfectum, quae quidem unitas diversitatem partium requirit».

The errors concerning the procession of the Many from the One, which St. Thomas attacks, follow from considering the Many as something absolute, which could not properly proceed from the One. But a deeper grasp of the problem reveals that, ultimately, the Many is but an imitation of the One. The ultimate principle of the unity of the manifold of creation is the identity of the superabundant unity of the divine essence¹. Only through the unity of the manifold can there be in creation that *Dei similitudo perfecta secundum modum suum*².

If the manifold of the intellectual creatures were but the result of intending this person to be, and that person to be, and so on, God would be primarily the propria ratio of one and of the other, and only secondarily the ratio communis of the many. Indeed, God would be reduced to the status of a univocal cause, and the created person elevated to that of a perfect exemplatum, «quod non multiplicatur nisi materialiter».

Ratio illa teneret de exemplo quod perfecte representat exemplar, quod non multiplicatur nisi materialiter. Unde imago increata, quae est perfecta, est una tantum. Sed nulla creatura representat perfecte exemplar primum, quod est divina essentia³.

Deus cognoscit omnia uno, quod est ratio plurimum, scilicet essentia sua, quae est similitudo rerum omnium; et quia essentia sua est propria ratio uniuscujusque rei, ideo de unoquoque propriam cognitionem habet. Qualiter autem unum possit esse multorum ratio propria et communis, sic considerari potest. Essentia enim divina secundum hoc est ratio aliquis rei, quod res illa divinam essentiam imitatur. Nulla autem res imitatur divinam essentiam ad plenum; sic enim non posset esse nisi una imitatio insinis; nec sua essentia esset per modum istum nisi unius propria ratio, sicut una sola est imago Patris perfecte eum imitans, scilicet Filius. Sed quia res creata imperfecte imitatur divinam essentiam, contingit esse diversas res diversimode imitantes; in quarum nulla est aliquid quod non (deductae a similitudine divinae essentiae; et ideo illud quod est proprium uniuscujusque rei, habet in divina essentia quod imitatur; et secundum hoc divina essentia est similitudo rei quantum ad proprium ipsius rei; et sic est propria ipsius ratio; et eadem ratione est propria alterius, et omnium aliorum. Est igitur communis omnium ratio, in quantum est res ipsa una, quam omnia imitantur: sed est propria huius ratio vel illius, secundum quod res eam diversimode imitantur: et sic propriam cognitionem divina essentia facit de unaquoque re, in quantum est propria ratio uniuscujusque⁴.

Indeed, we would have to reverse the doctrine of the following passage from Ia, q.15, a.2: Utrum sint plures ideae, which we have already quoted in part.

Respondeo dicendum quod necesse est ponere plures ideae. Ad cuius evitanciam, considerandum est quod in quolibet effectu illud quod est ultimus finis, proprie est intentionem a principatu agente; sicut ordo exercitus a duce. Illud autem quod est optimum in rebus existens, est bonum omnibus universis, ut patet per Philosophum in XII. Metaphys.

2. Contra Gentes, II, c.45.

3. Ia, q.47, a.1, ad 2.

4. De Ver., q.2, a.4, ad 2.

Ordo igitur universi est proprie a Deo intentus, et non per accidens proveniens secundum successionem agentium: prout quidam dixerunt quod Deus creavit primum creatum tantum, quod creatum creavit secundum creatum, et sic inde quousque producta est tanta rerum multitudo: secundum quam opinionem, Deus non habuerit nisi ideam primi creati. Sed, si ipse ordo universi est per se creatus ab eo, et intentus ab ipso, necesse est quod habeat ideam ordinis universi. Ratio autem aliter constituitur: sicut edificator speciem domus concipere non posset, nisi apud ipsum esset propria ratio cuiuslibet partium eius. Sic igitur oportet quod in mente divina sint propriae rationes omnium rerum. Unde dicit Augustinus, in libro Octoginta trium Quaest. quod singula propriis rationibus a Deo creata sunt. Unde sequitur quod in mente divina sint plures ideas.

We may now apply this general doctrine to the more restricted problem of why God made the intellectual creatures, who are properly in His image many and varied. Since their manifold qua manifold cannot constitute a single image; since to be in His image is proper to each intellectual creature taken separately; since, singly, any one of them is intensive a better expression of the unique uncreated original, what then can it be that is added by the varied manifold of images? The answer is that no single created image is a perfect image of God; to achieve a fuller created representation of the uncreated original, divine wisdom has made the created images many and varied. Absolutely speaking, this manifold is more expressive of the fullness of the original than any single created image. The manifold was conceived by divine wisdom for that very purpose, and it remains the greatest perfection that God produced in all spiritual creation.

To demand that, in order to be better absolutely than any of its parts, the whole possess intensively the perfection of its parts, is to misunderstand the nature and purpose of the whole.

... Optimi agentis est producere totum effectum suum optimum: non tamen quod quamlibet partem totius faciat optimam simpliciter, sed optimam secundum proportionem ad totum: tolleretur enim bonitas animalis, si quiesceret pars eius oculi haberet dignitatem. Sic igitur et Deus totum universum constituit optimum, secundum modum creature: non autem singulas creaturas, sed unam alia meliorem. Et ideo de singulis creaturis dicitur Gen. 1: Vidit Deus lucem quod esset bona, et similiter de singulis: sed de omnibus simul dicitur: Vidit Deus cuncta quae fecerat, et erant valde bona.

If the animal could not be better absolutely than its eye except by being better intensively, then, in order to be superior to this single organ, the entire animal would have to be an eye. Likewise, the universe itself would have to have an intellect and will; it would have to be a proper image of God. And since «nee per se de toto potest dici, et primo, quod non convenit sibi ratione omnium partium», even the irrational part of the universe would have to be in the image of God.

To this simplistic reasoning, St. Thomas answers:

Universum est perfectius in bonitate quam intellectualis creatura: extensiva et diffusive. Sed intensive et collective similitudo divina perfectionis magis invenitur in intellectuali creatura, quae est capax summi boni.

1. Ia, q. 47, a. 2, ad 1.

Let us now read Father Eschmann's paraphrase of this text.

St. Thomas' solution of the problem is so clear, so complete, and so perfectly balanced that it needs no explanation. Let us however try to paraphrase: Which is more like God, i.e. more to the image of God, the whole universe, or one single intellectual creature? The whole universe is more like God «extensively and diffusively». That is, if you consider God as the cause and fountain-head of the whole universe and of every creature pertaining to it, you will judge that there is quantitatively more likeness in the whole than in the parts. But before you consider God as cause, you must first look at Him as He is in Himself the supreme good by His essence. In this way a single intellectual creature is more perfectly likened to Him, because only the intellectual substance (every single intellectual substance) is capable of being, by knowledge and love, united with God as God is in Himself, «intensively», thus, «and collectively», i.e. considering the fact that the essentially most perfect likeness is gathered together in one single point, a single intellectual substance by far surpasses everything that might, in a certain sense, be said to be like God. The intellectual substance is, indeed, the only proper image of God... DM, 190-191.

Just what does my Opponent mean by: «there is quantitatively more likeness in the whole than in its parts»? Does he mean that whether God makes one image of Himself, or many, the difference is merely quantitative? That, absolutely speaking, there is no better expression of Himself when He produces images many and varied, than when He produces a single one? By his superficial understanding of the term «extensive»¹ Father Eschmann destroys the Thomistic doctrine of the reason why God made the intellectual creatures many and varied.

1. Another application of this distinction (intensive, extensive) is to be found in the answer to the question: Utrum Deus principaliter incarnatus fuerit in rationatum actuum peccatorum quam in remanentem originatum peccati... DM, 11, a. 4. We shall quote the relevant part of the body of the article as well as the third objection and answer.

«*Tanto autem principali ad alieum peccati deletionem Christus venit, quanto illud peccatum maius est. Dicitur autem maius aliquid dupliciter. Uno modo, intensive: sicut est maior albedo qua est in habet de ratione voluntarii, ut in Secundo dictum est.—Alto modo dicitur aliquid maius extensive: sicut dicitur maior albedo qua est in maiori superficie. Et hoc modo peccatum originale, per quod totum genus humanum inficitur, est maius quolibet peccato actuali, quod est proprium singulis personae. Et quantum ad hoc, Christus principalis venit ad tollendum originale peccatum: in quantum bonum genus dicitur est quam bonum unius, ut dicitur in 1. Epistolae.*»

The third argument in contrarium was:

«Præterea, sicut Chrysostomus dicit, in II de Compositione Corinthis, hic est affectus servorum fidelium, ut beneficia domini sui, quae communitur omnibus data sunt, quasi sibi propria præstata reputent: quasi enim de se solo loquens Paulus ita scribit, ad Galatas, 11. Beneficia enim et tradidit semetipsum pro me. Sed propria peccata nostra sunt actualia, originale enim est commune peccatum. Ergo hunc affectum debemus habere, ut astinemus eum principaliter propter actualia peccata venisse.»

Ad tertium respondetur dicendum quod, sicut Chrysostomus ibidem inducit, verba illa dicitur Apostolus, non quasi dimittere rationem intensive et per orbem terrarum diffusa Christi munera, sed ut pro omnibus se solam indicaret obnoxium. Quod enim interest si aliis præstata, cum quæ tibi sunt propria, ita integra sunt et ita perfecta quasi nulli alii ex his aliquid fuerit præstatum. Ex hoc ergo quod aliquis debet sibi reputare beneficia Christi præstata, esse, non debet existimare quod non sint præstata aliis. Et ideo non excluditur quin principaliter peccatum commune ita perfecte curatum, re quam peccatum unius persone. Sed idem.—Et præterea, propter unionem caritatis, totum quod omnibus est impensatum, Cajetan says: «... Auctor, explicando secundam conclusionem, et non primam intensive est quam bonum unius, insinuat conclusionem re ad bonum genus, et simpliciter est absolute illam esse quam expressit in responsione ad tertium. Principaliter venit abolere peccatum totius nature quam peccatum unius persone».—See also F. C. B. BULLIANT, Summa Sancti Thomae, tract. de Incarnatione, dissert. 3, a. 4.

When we consider God «as He is in Himself the supreme good by His essence» and the intellectual creature as «capable of being, by knowledge and love, united with God as God is in Himself», the good in question is beyond that universe to which the intellectual creature is compared as a part to a whole. In this respect, the intellectual creature is not to be considered formally as a part of the universe at all. Father Eschmann had promised to consider the second part of this thesis, viz. the statement regarding the intrinsic common good of the universe and its relation to the intellectual beings or persons.—DM, 187.

Now he suddenly shifts to the first part of the thesis and speaks as if I had maintained that the intrinsic common good of the universe is to be identified with the absolutely ultimate good of the intellectual creatures. Why does my Opponent do these things? He might have quoted Ia, Iæ, q. 2, a. 8, ad 2:

... Si totum aliquod non sit ultimus finis, sed ordinetur ad finem ulteriorem, ultimus finis partis non est ipsum totum, sed aliquid aliud. Universitas autem creaturarum, ad quam comparatur homo ut pars ad totum, non est ultimus finis, sed ordinatur in Deum sicut in ultimum finem. Unde bonum universi non est ultimus finis hominis, sed ipse Deus.

But then it might be too obvious that, when stressing this aspect of the intellectual creature («apax summi boni»), he is not confining himself to «the second part of this thesis».

Because the comparison between the perfection of the universe as a likeness to God and the perfection of the intellectual creature as «apax summi boni», called for by the objection, is not an adequate comparison, St. Thomas adds:

Vel dicendum, quod pars non dividitur contra totum, sed contra aliam partem. Unde cum dicitur quod sola natura intellectualis est ad imaginem Dei, non excluditur quoniam universum secundum aliquam sui partem sit ad imaginem Dei, sed excluduntur alia partes universi.

The universe may be said to be in the image of God, but only because of the rational natures.

... Similitudo divina bonitatis, quantum ad nobilissimas participationes ipsius, non resultat in universo nisi ratione nobilissimarum partium ejus, quæ sunt intellectuales nature: nec per se de toto potest dici, et primo, quod non convenit sibi ratione omnium partium, ut in VI Physic. dicitur frequenter: et ideo universum non potest dici imago Dei, sed intellectualis natura¹.

But here is Father Eschmann's paraphrase of the second part of St. Thomas' answer:

The Angelic Doctor then continues, not by proposing another solution, but by stressing a certain aspect of the same solution which in the foregoing has been left aside. Are not the intellectual substances parts, i.e. of course, principal, formal, constitutive, primary, parts of the universe? Are they not, as it were, the sons of that great family or economy of the universe of which God is the paterfamilias? Are they not, just as sons are, very deeply interested in the vicissitudes of that which is their possession and heredity—and the possession and heredity of each one of them, according to Holy Scripture (Matth. 24:47): «Super omnia bona sua constituet eum»? The statement, therefore, that the intellectual substance alone is ad imaginem Dei, might be expanded by saying that the universe in one of its parts, and precisely in its first and foremost constitutive parts, is ad imaginem Dei. In this way a solution of the problem is obtained which is most properly «Thomistic» in that it takes account of every possible aspect of the problem.—DM, 191.

We shall not try to unravel in what sense this passage may be considered as a paraphrase of St. Thomas' text. But whatever it may be as a paraphrase, insofar as my Opponent turns it against the second part of my thesis, he is again exploiting his own confusion as I have already pointed out: he confuses the good of the persons that is the universe, with the good that is the persons; he confuses the persons as contributing to the essential perfection of the universe (which perfection is, within this order, their finis cuius gratia) with the persons considered as «for whom» (finis cui) is the perfection of the universe. Why did he overlook this distinction?

La substance intellectuelle étant «comprehensive totius entis», étant une partie de l'univers dans laquelle peut exister, selon la connaissance, la perfection de l'univers tout entier, son bien le plus propre en tant qu'elle est une substance intellectuelle n'est le bien de l'univers, bien essentiellement commun. La substance intellectuelle n'est pas ce bien comme elle est, l'univers selon la connaissance. En effet, il convient de marquer ici la différence radicale entre la connaissance et l'appétit: le commun est dans le connaissant, le bien est dans les choses¹. Si, comme le commun, le bien était dans l'aimant, nous serions à nous-mêmes le bien de l'univers.—BC, 13.

C'est donc tout autre chose de dire que les créatures raisonnables sont gouvernées et ordonnées pour elles-mêmes, et de dire qu'elles le sont à elles-mêmes et pour leur bien singulier: elles sont ordonnées pour elles-mêmes au bien commun. Le bien commun est pour elles, mais il est pour elles comme bien commun. Les créatures raisonnables peuvent atteindre elles-mêmes de manière explicite le bien auquel toutes choses sont ordonnées: elles diffèrent par là des créatures irraisonnables, qui sont de purs instruments, qui sont utiles seulement et qui n'atteignent pas elles-mêmes de manière explicite le bien universel auquel elles sont ordonnées. Et c'est en cela que consiste la dignité de la nature raisonnable.—BC, 35.

... La créature raisonnable, en tant qu'elle peut elle-même atteindre à la fin de la manifestation de Dieu au dehors, existe pour elle-même. Les créatures irraisonnables n'existent que pour ce être qui pourra lui-même atteindre à cette fin qui ne fut qu'implement le leur. L'homme est la dignité qui est leur fin. Mais, cela ne veut pas dire que la créature raisonnable existe pour la dignité de son être propre et qu'elle elle-même la dignité pour laquelle elle existe. Elle tire sa dignité de la fin à laquelle elle peut et doit atteindre; sa dignité consiste en ce qu'elle peut atteindre à la fin de l'univers, la fin de l'univers étant, sous ce rapport, pour les créatures raisonnables, à savoir, pour chacune d'elles. Cependant, le bien de l'univers n'est pas pour elles comme si celles-ci étaient la fin pour laquelle il est. Il est le bien de chacune d'elles en tant qu'il est leur bien comme bien commun.—BC, 38.

Since the good of the universe is the same «pour chacune d'elles», since it is a good which does not belong to one person to the exclusion of the other person, it is strictly a common good. In support of this position I might have quoted the very text my Opponent levels at me (DM, 191, n. 15):

Inter omnes... partes universi excellunt sancti Dei, ad quorum quemlibet pertinere quod dicitur Matth. xxiv: Super omnia bona sua constituet eum. Et ideo quicquid accedit, vel circa ipsos vel alias res, totum in bonum eorum credit...¹.

Let us now turn to section III of Father Eschmann's article, which he has seen fit to entitle: «Professor De Koninck's notion of God».

V. QUIS UT DEUS?

Let us be certain that we grasp clearly the distinction between a common good and a proper good. The proper good of one person is never the proper good of another person; the proper good of the one is never the proper good of another; if the good aimed at by one person be a proper good, it is impossible for it to be the proper good of another, for the good in these two cases differs by a numerical distinction. A proper good may indeed be spoken of as common to many persons, but we are then using the term «common» in the sense of «common according to predication».—BC, 34-35. The following objection and answer, taken from In IV Sent., d. 49, q. 1, a. 1, qa 1, obj. 3, and sol. 1, ad 3, are to the point:

Præterea, quanto aliquod bonum est communius, tanto divinius, ut patet in I Ethic., cap. 1. Sed bonum corporale communius est quam spirituale: quia corporale ad plantas et animalia bruta extendit, non autem spirituale. Ergo corporale bonum spirituali præeminet; et ita in corporalibus bonis magis est beatitudo quaerenda.

Ad tertium dicendum, quod dupliciter aliquid dicitur esse commune. Uno modo per predicationem; huiusmodi autem commune non est idem numero in divinis rebus; et hoc modo habet bonum corporis, communitatem. Alio modo est aliquid commune secundum participationem unius et ejusdem rei secundum numerum; et hæc communitas maxime potest in his que ad animam pertinent, inveniri; quia per ipsam attingitur ad id quod est commune bonum omnibus rebus, scilicet Deum; et ideo ratio non procedit.

When St. Thomas asserts that God is a common good, he means a good which is numerically one, yet which can be the end of many.

Bonum particulare ordinatur in bonum commune sicut in finem: esse enim partis est, propter esse totius; unde et bonum genitum est divinius quam bonum genus hominis. Bonum autem summum, quod est Deus, est bonum commune, cum ex eo universum quod dependeat: bonum autem quo quælibet res bona est, est bonum particulare ipsius et aliorum que ab ipso dependent. Omnes igitur res ordinantur sicut in finem in unum bonum, quod est Deus¹.

The most striking text my Opponent quotes (DM, 195) against the first part of my thesis, that namely, which maintains that with respect to any created person God is most properly a common good, consists undoubtedly in the nine words he has extracted from the Q. D. de Caritate, a. 5, ad 4: Bonum commune non est objectum caritatis, sed summum bonum.

Does the expression bonum commune stand for a bonum commune in predicando, or for a bonum commune in causando? That we can hardly know without taking a look at the context. The complete text, the objection and the answer, will settle this difficulty. The problem St. Thomas is discussing is: Utrum caritas sit virtus specialis.

4. Præterea, bonum est objectum generale omnium virtutum: nam virtus est que bonum facit habentem, et opus ejus bonum reddit. Sed bonum est objectum caritatis. Ergo caritas habet objectum generale; et ita est generalis virtus.

Hence, according to this objection, the object of the theological virtue of charity would be the general good sought by all the virtues, that is, the good which is predicable of the object of any virtue. To this St. Thomas answers:

1. Contra Gentiles, III, c. 17.

Ad quartum dicendum, quod bonum commune non est objectum caritatis, sed summum bonum; et ideo non sequitur quod caritas sit generalis virtus, sed quod sit summa virtutum.

Concerning this text my Opponent commits several gross errors. Those nine words cannot be lifted from their context without rendering them hopelessly ambiguous. For, the «common good» of this text is to be taken, not as the common good of persons, but as the good common to the different virtues nor is it a commune in causando, but in predicando and in essendo. If the «bonum commune» of this text were to be understood as a commune secundum virtutem or in causando (the objection shows that it is not), we should then conclude that charity is a general virtue.

A glance at the reply which St. Thomas elsewhere offers to a similar question will suffice to make this last point clear. Discussing the nature of general justice, (Ia IIæ, q. 58, a. 6, c.) he asks: Utrum justitia, secundum quod est generalis, sit idem per essentialiam cum omni virtute. The first two objections of this article had referred to two statements from Ethics, V, c. 1: «virtus et justitia legalis est eadem omni virtuti, esse autem non est idem», and «justitia prædicta... non est pars virtutis, sed lata virtus».

Respondeo dicendum quod generale dicitur aliquid dupliciter. Uno modo, per prædicationem: sicut animal est generale ad hominem et equum et ad alia hujusmodi. Et hoc modo generale oportet quod sit idem essentialiter cum his ad que est generale: quia genus pertinet ad essentialiam speciei et cadit in definitione eius.—Alio modo dicitur aliquid generale secundum virtutem: sicut causa universalis est generalis ad omnes effectus, ut sol ad omnia corpora, que illuminantur vel immutantur per virtutem ipsius. Et hoc modo generale non oportet quod sit idem in essentialia cum his ad que est generale: quia non est eadem essentialia causa et effectus.

Hoc autem modo, secundum prædicta, justitia legalis dicitur esse virtus generalis: inquantum scilicet ordinat actus aliarum virtutum ad suum finem, quod est movere per imperium omnes alias virtutes. Sicut enim caritas potest dici virtus generalis inquantum ordinat actus omnium virtutum ad bonum commune. Ita etiam justitia legalis inquantum ordinat actus omnium virtutum ad bonum commune. Sicut ergo caritas que respicit bonum divinum ut proprium objectum, est quedam specialis virtus secundum suam essentialiam; ita etiam justitia legalis est specialis virtus secundum suam essentialiam, secundum quod respicit commune bonum ut proprium objectum. Et sic est in principio principaliter, et quasi architectonice; in subditis autem secundario et quasi ministrative.

Potest tamen quælibet virtus, secundum quod a prædicta virtute, speciali quidem in essentialia, generali autem secundum virtutem, ordinatur ad bonum commune, dici justitia legalis. Et hoc modo loquendi justitia legalis est idem in essentialia cum omni virtute, differt autem ratione. Et hoc modo loquitur Philosophus.

It should be noted that, even when we call the theological virtue of charity a general virtue in this sense, we do so, not because it has as its object a good communicable to many persons, but because charity «ordinat actus omnium virtutum ad bonum divinum». Hence Father Eschmann's quotation, if rightly understood, is not even concerned with the position he attacks.

Nor is this all, for it can be readily shown how his misinterpretation of the words «bonum commune» in this phrase of which he makes so much, leads him into impossible difficulties. That it may be quite clear the adversary is being done no injustice, let me make one or two preliminary remarks to establish beyond doubt that he does understand this term in the sense which we are attributing to him. I will ask the reader to recall that throughout my own essay I most unambiguously use the expression «common good» for a bonum commune in causando; let us note, moreover, that all my quotations from St. Thomas concern this good and that I maintain God is most formally a good in this sense. Now this is, of course, precisely the position Father Eschmann attacks: so that when he finally brings forth this text from De Caritate, a.5, ad 4, as a climactic titilla Sancti Thomæ, it is impossible that, in the phrase bonum commune non est obiectum caritatis, sed summum bonum, he can be taking bonum commune to mean anything other than bonum commune in causando. Consequently, when St. Thomas elsewhere expressly says that every creature naturally loves God more than itself because He is their common good, and that this also holds true for love according to the theological virtue of charity, my Opponent is compelled to maintain that in such passages, God is understood to be a common good only (in a certain sense).—DM, 195.

Then to prove this interpretation by the littera Sancti Thomæ, Father Eschmann quotes three entire words from Ia, q.60, a.5, ad 5: «quoddam [!] bonum commune». Anyone sufficiently acquainted with Latin, will know that when those three words alone are taken, it is impossible to determine the meaning of «quoddam». It may be intended as an indefinite pronoun, «a certain one» or simply «a»—in which case we would translate «a common good»—or it may be taken as an adjective meaning «as it were», «so to speak», or «in a certain sense»? The first is the principal meaning of «quoddam», and St. Thomas most frequently uses it in this sense, as any one familiar with his text must know.³ But let us turn to the context of this extremely succinct quotation which Father Eschmann has taken from the article: Utrum Angelus naturali dilectione diligat Deum plus quam seipsum.

Ad quantum dicendum quod, cum in Deo sit unum et idem ejus substantia et bonum commune, omnes qui vident ipsam Dei essentiam, eodem motu dilectionis moventur in ipsam. Dei essentiam prout est ab aliis distincta, et secantem quod est quoddam bonum commune. Et quia in quantum est bonum commune, naturaliter amatur ab omnibus: quicumque videt eum per essentiam, impossibile est quin diligat ipsum. Sed illi qui non vident essentiam ejus, cognoscunt eum per aliquos particulares effectus, qui interdum eorum voluntati contrariantur. Et sic hoc modo dicuntur odio habere Deum: cum tamen, in quantum est bonum commune omnium, unumquodque naturaliter diligat plus Deum quam seipsum.

1. The exclamation point is Father Eschmann's.

2. See, for example, Bradley's Arnold's Latin Prose Composition. Edited and revised by J. F. Mountriford, Longmans, Green and Co., London, New York, Toronto, 1938, p.205, paragr.361,—or any elementary Latin grammar.

3. I quoted a text (BC, 24; 174, n.5) which should have been a warning: «Est autem quoddam bonum commune quod pertinet ad hunc vel ad illum in quantum est pars aliquis totius, sicut ad multum in quantum est pars exercitus, et ad civem, in quantum est pars civitatis: . . . »—De Caritate, a.4, ad 2. Does St. Thomas mean that the common good of the citizen is a common good only in a certain sense? When St. Thomas says: «verum est quoddam bonum commune quod est in seipso, et in a certe Aristotelian and Thomistic doctrine of the speculative and practical intellect, and more particularly the absolute primacy of the speculative intellect. Cf. Ia, q.82, a.3, ad 3; ibid., CARSTAN, nn.21-24; ibid., a.4, ad 1; De Ver., q.14, a.4, c.; In III Sent., d.23, q.2, a.3, sol.2, ad 3.

My Opponent does not realize that, besides making the gratuitous assumption that «quoddam» must mean «in a certain sense», he is implicitly accusing St. Thomas of constructing a syllogism with four terms! For unless «bonum universale» is a «bonum commune» in the strict sense («cum in Deo sit unum et idem ejus substantia et bonum commune»), the whole proof of this article is sophistical. The same holds for the following texts:

... Diligere Deum super omnia plus quam seipsum, est naturale non solum angelo et homini, sed etiam cuilibet creature, secundum quod potest amare aut sensibilibus aut naturaliter. Inclinationes enim naturales maxime exprimuntur in his que naturaliter aguntur absque rationis deliberatione: sic enim agit unumquodque in natura, sicut aptum natum est agi. Videmus autem quod unumquodque pars naturali quadam inclinatione operatur ad bonum totius, etiam cum periculo aut detrimento proprio: ut patet cum aliquis manum exponit gladio ad defensionem capitis, ex quo dependet salus totius corporis. Unde naturale est ut quilibet pars suo modo plus amet totam quam seipsum. Unde et secundum hanc naturalem inclinationem, et secundum politam virtutem, bonus civis mortis periculo, se exponit pro bono communi. Manifestum est autem quod Deus est bonum commune totius universi et omnium partium ejus: unde quilibet creatura suo modo naturaliter plus amat Deum quam seipsum; insensibilia quidem naturaliter, bruta vero animalia sensitive, creatura vero rationalis per intellectum amorem, que dilectio dicitur.⁴

1. Here is St. Thomas' proof in the body of the article: «Sed falsitas huius opinionis (scilicet angelus naturali dilectione plus diligit se quam Deum), manifeste apparet, si quis in rebus naturalibus consideret ad quid res naturaliter movetur: inclinatio enim naturalis in his que sunt sine ratione, demonstrat inclinationem naturalem in voluntate intellectuales naturas. Unumquodque autem in rebus naturalibus, quod secundum naturam hoc ipsum quod est, alterius est, principibus et magis inclinatibus naturaliter est, quam in seipsum. Et hanc inclinationem naturalis demonstrat ex his et cogit, ut dicitur in II Physic. Videmus enim quod naturaliter pars se exponit ad conservationem totius: sicut manus exponitur ictui, absque deliberatione, ad conservationem totius corporis. Et quia ratio imitatur naturam, hunc eundem inclinationem invenimus in virtutibus politicis: est enim virtuosus civis, ut se exponat mortis periculo pro totius republice conservatione; et si homo esset naturalis pars huius civitatis, hanc inclinationem esset ei naturalis.

«Quia igitur bonum universale est ipse Deus, et sub hoc homo continetur etiam angelus et homo et omnis creatura, quia omnis creatura naturaliter, secundum id quod est, Dei est; sequitur quod naturali dilectione magis seipsum diligit et homo plus et principaliter diligit Deum quam seipsum. Atquin, si naturaliter plus seipsum diligeret quam Deum, sequeretur quod naturalis dilectio esset perversa; et quod non perferretur per caritatem, sed desecraretur.—The other answers to the arguments in contrarium are also relevant to our problem.

«Ad primum ergo dicendum quod ratio illa, procedit in his que ex æquo dividuntur, quorum unum non est alteri ratio existendi et bonitatis: in talibus enim unumquodque diligit naturaliter magis seipsum quam eum, in quantum est magis sibi ipsi unum quam alteri. Sed in illis quorum unum est tota ratio existendi et bonitatis alii, magis diligit naturaliter tale alterum quam ipsum: sicut dictum est quod unaqueque pars diligit naturaliter totum plus quam se. Et quodlibet singulare naturaliter diligit plus bonum suæ speciei, quam unumquodque bonum suum singulare. Deus autem non solum est bonum unius speciei, sed etiam universale bonum simpliciter. Unde unumquodque suo modo naturaliter diligit Deum plus quam seipsum.

«Ad tertium dicendum quod natura reflexivetur in seipsum non solum quantum ad id quod est et singularare, sed multo magis quantum ad commune: inclinatur enim unumquodque ad conservandum non solum suum individuum, sed etiam suam speciem. Et nullo magis habet naturalem inclinationem unumquodque in id quod est bonum universale simpliciter.

«Ad quartum dicendum quod Deus, secundum quod est universale bonum, a quo dependet omne bonum naturale, diligitur naturali dilectione ab unoquoque. In quantum vero est bonum naturalis naturaliter omnes supernaturales beatitudines, sic diligit dilectione caritatis.

2. Quodlibetum I, q.4, a.8, c.

... Diligere autem Deum super omnia est quidem connaturale homini; et etiam cuiuslibet creature non solum rationali, sed irrationali et etiam inanimatae, secundum modum amoris qui unicuique creature competere potest. Cujus ratio est quia unicuique naturale est quod appetat et amet aliquid, secundum quod aptum naturam est esse: sic enim agit unusquisque, prout aptum naturam est, ut dicitur in 2^a Physic. Manifestum est autem quod bonum paritas est propter bonum totius. Unde etiam naturalis appetitus vel amore unusquisque res particularis amat bonum suum proprium propter bonum commune totius universi, quod est Deus. Unde et Dionysius dicit, in lib. de Divin. Nomin. quod Deus convertit omnia ad amorem sui ipsius. Unde homo in statu nature integre dilectionem sui ipsius referebat ad amorem Dei sicut ad finem, et similiter dilectionem omnium aliarum rerum. Et ita Deum diligebat plus quam seipsum, et super omnia. Sed in statu nature corruptae homo ab hoc deficit secundum appetitum voluntatis rationalis, quae propter corruptionem nature sequitur bonum privatum, nisi sanetur per gratiam Dei¹.

To show that, according to charity, we must love God more than ourselves, St. Thomas uses the same reason.

Respondeo dicendum quod a Deo duplex bonum accipere possumus: scilicet bonum nature, et bonum gratiae. Super communicatione autem bonorum naturalium nobis a Deo facta fundatur amor naturalis, quo non solum homo in sup. integritate nature super omnia diligit Deum et plus quam seipsum, sed etiam quelibet creatura suo modo, id est vel intellectuali, vel rationali vel animali, vel saltem naturali amore, sicut lapides et alia quae cognitione carent, quia unusquisque pars naturaliter plus amorem commune bonum totius quam particulare bonum, proprium. Quod manifestatur ex opere: quelibet enim pars habet inclinationem principalem ad actionem communem utilitati totius. Apparet etiam hoc in politicis virtutibus, secundum quas civis pro bono communitatis et dispensatiam propriam rerum et personarum intendit sustinere.— Unde multo magis hoc verificatur in amicitia caritatis, quae fundatur super communicationem donorum gratiae. Et ideo ex caritate magis debet homo diligere Deum, quia est bonum commune omnium, quam seipsum, quia beatitudo est in Deo sicut in communi et fontem omnium principio quae beatitudinem participare possunt.

Ad primum dicendum quod Philosophus (amicabilia quae sunt ad alterum veniunt ex amicitabilibus quae sunt ad seipsum)² loquitur de amicitabilibus quae sunt ad alterum in quo bonum quod est obiectum amicitiae invenitur secundum aliquem particularem modum: non autem de amicitabilibus quae sunt ad alterum in quo bonum praedictum invenitur secundum rationem totius.

Ad secundum dicendum quod bonum totius diligit quidem pars secundum quod est sibi convenientis: non autem ita quod bonum totius ad se referat, sed potius ita quod seipsum referat in bonum totius.

Ad tertium dicendum quod hoc quod aliquis velit frui Deo, pertinet ad amorem quo Deus amatur amore concupiscentiae. Magis autem amamus Deum amore amicitiae quam amore concupiscentiae: quia magis est in se bonum Dei quam participare possumus fruendo ipso. Et ideo simpliciter homo magis diligit Deum ex caritate quam seipsum³.

My Opponent simply does not realize that the notion of common good is an analogical notion. That is why, when we call God a common good, he will allow it to be a common good only (in a certain sense).

But we do maintain that, for any intellectual creature, God can never be sought than a common good. Nor need there be any hesitation in declaring that to prescind from the superabundant and inexhaustible communicability of divine goodness to other persons, amounts to prescinding ing from the infinite plenitude of divine goodness. There is a solid argument for this profound truth which it is not difficult to defend against the attack which Father Eschmann makes by means of a quotation taken from Ia IIæ, q. 4, a. 8, ad 3 (DAL, 196, n. 20):

Si esset una sola anima fruentis Deo, beata esset, non habens proximum quem diligeret. My Opponent might have mentioned that I used this very objection, and might have tried to refute my answer:

4. La béatitude de la personne singulière ne dépend pas de la communication de cette béatitude à plusieurs. De plus, il faut aimer Dieu en premier lieu et le prochain ex consensu. Donc le caractère commun de la béatitude est secondaire: celle-ci est d'abord et en premier le bien de la personne singulière.

Nous répondons que si de soi la béatitude de la personne singulière ne dépend pas de la communication actuelle de cette béatitude à plusieurs, elle n'en dépend pas moins de son essentielle communicabilité à plusieurs. Et la raison en est la surabondance de ce bien qu'est la béatitude, et son incommunicabilité au bien singulier de la personne. Le péché des anges consistait à vouloir tout, bien communisable à leur bien propre. L'homme pêche quand il veut le bien de l'intelligence communisable au bien privé. Dès lors, quand même une seule personne jouirait de la béatitude, elle aurait toujours raison de partir en face de ce bien surabondant: même si en fait elle était seule pour en jouir, jamais la personne singulière ne pourrait considérer ce bien comme le sien singulier.—BC, 55-56.

Rappelons encore une fois que le bien commun est dit commun dans sa surabondance et dans son incommunicabilité au bien singulier. Or le bien proprement divin est si grand qu'il ne pourrait pas être le bien propre, même de la création tout entière: celle-ci gardera toujours en quelque façon raison de partir. Il est très vrai qu'en cela du bien commun la personne singulière peut le vivre tout à fait, mais il n'est pas pour cela approprié à la personne comme bien singulier. Le bien qu'elle dit 'mien' n'est pas pour elle prise comme fin. S'il était tel, le bien qu'est la personne elle-même serait la fin pour laquelle il est voulu.—BC, 65.

Why is God so insistent that we love our neighbour? Why does our very salvation depend upon the love of our neighbour? If any man say: *I love God, and hate his brother; he is a liar*¹. It can surely be only because it is impossible to love God as He is in Himself without loving Him in His communicability to others. If God had created and beatified but a single intellectual creature, He would still have to be loved in His communicability to other intellectual creatures. God is the bonum universale simpliciter. There can never be a proportion of equality between this infinite good and the intellectual creature's capacity for beatitude. The divine good can never be other than a common good for the creature. To prescind from the inexhaustible communicability of the divine good to others, whether it is actually communicated or not, is to prescind from the bonum universale itself.

When St. Thomas says that God is a common good according to His substance, he does not mean that God is a common good with respect to Himself, nor that the actual diffusion of His goodness to others is of the very nature of God; the Angelic Doctor means that it is of the very nature of God to be a common good for any creature He freely chooses to create. A similar distinction must be made in connection with the following text from IIa, q. 1, a. 1, c.: Utrum fuerit convenientis Deum incarnari:

1. I Jo., iv, 20.

Respondeo dicendum quod unicuique rei conveniens est illud quod competit sibi secundum rationem proprie nature: sicut homini conveniens est rationari quia hoc convenit sibi inquantum est rationalis secundum suam naturam. Ipsa autem natura Dei est bonitas: ut patet per Dionysium, 1 cap. de Div. Nom. Unde quicquid pertinet ad rationem boni, conveniens est Deo.

Pertinet autem ad rationem boni ut se aliis communicet: ut patet per Dionysium, IV cap. de Div. Nom. Unde ad rationem summi boni pertinet quod summo modo se creature communit. Quod quidem maxime fit per hoc quod naturam creatam sic sibi conjungit ut una persona fiat ex tribus, Verbo, anima et carne; sicut dicit Augustinus, XIII de Trin. Unde manifestum est quod conveniens fuit Deum incarnari.¹

Just as we say that «ad rationem summi boni pertinet quod summo modo se creature communit», we say also that it is of the very nature of the divine good to be a common good. We cannot love the bonum universale except as the common good, that is, the good which incommensurably surpasses anything which might be the proper good of a creature and which, because of its very infinity, is communicable to others as bonum universale. If God could be the proper good (proper as opposed to common) of any created person, He could not be the good of another person. *Bonum unius personæ singularis non est finis alterius*². If our ultimate end were a proper good, we ourselves would be our ultimate end. Why does my Opponent choose to overlook the text I quoted (BC, 24-25; 174-175) from De Caritate, a. 4, ad 2? The objection was:

Philosophus dicit in IX Ethic. (cap VIII, parum a princ.), quod amicitabilia quæ sunt ad alterum, veniunt ex amicitabilibus quæ sunt ad seipsum. Sed id quod est principium et causa, est potissimum in unoquoque genere. Ergo homo ex caritate diligit seipsum tanquam principale objectum, et non Deum.

To this St. Thomas answers:

... Quod cum amor respiciat bonum, secundum diversitatem boni est diversitas amoris. Est autem quoddam bonum proprium alicuius hominis in quantum est singularis persona; et quantum ad dilectionem respiciendum hoc bonum, unusquisque est sibi principale objectum dilectionis. Est autem quoddam bonum commune quod pertinet ad hunc vel ad illum in quantum est pars alicuius totius, sicut ad militem, in quantum est pars exercitus, et ad civem, in quantum est pars civitatis; et quantum ad dilectionem respiciendum hoc bonum, principale objectum dilectionis est illud in quo principaliter illud bonum consistit, sicut bonum exercitus in duce, et bonum civitatis in rege; unde ad officium boni militis pertinet ut etiam salutem suam negligat ad conservandum bonum ducis, sicut etiam homo naturaliter ad conservandum caput, brachium exponit; unusquisque secundum quod esse potest particeps beatitudinis; unde ea sola ex caritate diligimus que nobiscum beatitudinem participare possunt, ut Augustinus dicit in lib. de Doctrina Christiana.

What does «et hoc modo» stand for? Is it not unmistakably opposed to the love of the «bonum proprium alicuius hominis in quantum est singularis persona»? It is difficult to understand how Father Eschmann can manage so explicitly to contradict the littera Sancti Thomæ, and to be so unaware of destroying the very root of charity toward our neighbour, which is the divine good prout est beatitudinis objectum.

1. See CAJETAN'S commentary, n.6.—Also Ia IIæ, q. 1, a. 4, ad 1, with commentary by the same.

2. Ia IIæ, q. 58, a. 9, ad 3.

Let us now turn to his diatribe against my use of a text taken from De Caritate, a. 2, c.:

To prove his assertion by a text of St. Thomas, Professor De K. extracts a few words from the Q. D. De Caritate (art. 2). The content of these words is so important that we ask the patient reader to excuse us for transcribing the relevant text in its entirety. We shall italicize the words to which Professor De K. draws attention. St. [? sicut] autem homo, in quantum admittitur ad participandum bonum alicuius civitatis et efficitur civis illius civitatis: Competunt ei virtutes quedam ad operandum ea que sunt civium, et amandum bonum illius civitatis, ita, cum homo per divinam gratiam admittatur in participationem celestis beatitudinis, que in visione Dei consistit, fit quasi civis et socius illius beate societatis, que vocatur Cælestis Jerusalem, secundum illud Ep. 2, 19: «Estis civis sanctorum et domestici Dei». Unde homini sic ad cælestia adscripto quedam virtutes gratuite, que sunt virtutes infuse, ad quarum debitam operationem præcægitur amor hominum totius societatis, quod est bonum divinum, prout est beatitudinis objectum.

To begin our criticism of this whole position, let us first say a few words with regard to the author's exegetical methods. The word «præcægitur» extracted from St. Thomas' text, is at once commanded by Professor De K. to supplement the arsenal of his own ammunition. Whereas, according to St. Thomas' text, there is something prerequisite for the exercise of the infused virtues, according to Professor De K. this something is made a prerequisite for a moral philosophy and a social metaphysics. A facile device to support one's own assertions by authority! The solemn gravity of an apparently authentic quotation, given in Latin, turns out to be an empty show. Was this quotation intended to impress the reader or is it possible that the author himself was impressed by his pseudo-discovery? Strictly speaking, the disclosure of such an inept method of dealing with a text would authorize us in taking no further account whatsoever either of this excerpt or of the teaching based upon it.—DM, 193-194.

Father Eschmann has not quoted the relevant text in its entirety. Strangely enough, he omits the most important section. Here is the complete text of the passages I had already quoted both in French and in Latin: Proprium autem bonum hominis oportet diversimode accipi, secundum quod homo diversimode accipitur. Nam proprium bonum hominis in quantum homo, est bonum rationis, eo quod homini esse est rationale esse. Bonum autem hominis secundum quod est artifex, est bonum artis; et sic etiam secundum quod est politicus, est bonum eius bonum commune civitatis. Ad hoc quod aliquis sit bonus politicus, requiritur quod amet bonum civitatis (*). Si autem homo, in quantum admittitur ad participandum bonum alicuius civitatis, et efficitur civis illius civitatis; competunt ei virtutes quedam ad operandum ea que sunt civium, et ad amandum bonum civitatis; ita cum homo per divinam gratiam admittatur in participationem celestis beatitudinis, que in visione Dei consistit, fit quasi civis et socius illius beate societatis, que vocatur cælestis Jerusalem secundum illud, Ep. 2, 19: «Estis civis sanctorum et domestici Dei». Unde homini sic ad cælestia adscripto competunt quedam virtutes gratuite, que sunt virtutes infuse; et quarum debitam operationem præcægitur amor boni communis totius societatis, quod est bonum divinum, prout est beatitudinis objectum. (). Amare autem bonum alicuius civitatis contingit tripliciter: uno modo ut habeatur: alio modo ut conservetur. Amare autem bonum alicuius civitatis ut habeatur et possideatur, non facit bonum politicum: quia sic etiam atque tyrannus amat bonum alicuius civitatis ut ei dominetur: quod est amare seipsum magis quam civitatem; sibi enim ipsi hoc bonum concupiscit, non civitatem. Sed amare bonum civitatis ut conservetur et defendatur, hoc est vere amare civitatem: quod bonum politicum facit; in tantum quod atque propter privatum bonum. Sic igitur amare bonum quod a beatis mortis exponant et negligant privatum bonum. Conservandum vel ampliandum, se periculis participatur ut habeatur vel possideatur, non facit hominem bene se habentem ad beatitudinem, quia etiam mali illud bonum concupiscit, sed amare illud bonum secundum se, ut permaneat et diffundatur, et ut nihil contra illud bonum agatur, hoc facit hominem bene se habentem ad illam societatem beatorum; et hæc est caritas, quæ Deum per se diligit, et proximos quæ sunt capaces beatitudinis, sicut seipsum.

() His quotation ends here.

How could St. Thomas state more clearly that in order to love the «bonum divinum, prout est beatitudinis objectum», it is not enough to love it «ut habeatur et possideatur», for this is the way tyrants love the common good; we must love it «secundum se, ut permanent et diffundatur». Even the wicked have the kind of love of the divine good which my Opponent advocates: «amare bonum quod a beatis participat ut habeatur vel possideatur; non facit hominem bene se habentem ad beatitudinem, quia etiam mali illud bonum concupiscunt». To urge that God is to be loved as the object of beatitude, yet not loved as the divine good «secundum se, ut permanent et diffundatur», would be to defend a most perverted form of selfishness.

And now for Father Eschmann's interpretation of as much of the «relevant text» as he quotes:

Is it true that St. Thomas taught, as Professor De K. would have us to believe, that the object of our beatitude, the very first and essential element of our ordination to God, is the divine good, insofar as this good is a common good, constituting first and foremost, a society («amor boni communis toti societati, quod est bonum divinum, prout est beatitudinis objectum»)? By no means! This interpretation is false. St. Thomas' argument in the De Caritate, loco cit., proceeds a simili, i.e. by comparing two highest goods, each taken in its own order, not, properly speaking, two common goods. The highest good of the earthly city is called a common good. No description or definition of it is given in this text. St. Thomas is here not lecturing on social metaphysics or political philosophy, but on charity; and the example of the city is only used as an argumentum ad hominem. To the earthly city, referred to in the example, the Heavenly City corresponds as the thing exemplified; and, through the words «quasi [] civitas» (to which corresponds in the parallel text, Summa, I, 60, 5 ad 3, «quoddam [] bonum commune»), St. Thomas takes care, at the outset, to keep us from over-extending the simile and, thus, getting on the wrong track. To confuse examples with formal teaching is quite inadmissible. Let us paraphrase the passage in question, in order to set its true significance in relief: Prerequisite to the exercise of infused virtues in the Heavenly City is the love of the highest good which is the divine good, the object of beatitude. In like manner, the love of the earthly city's highest good, i.e. its common good, is prerequisite to the exercise of natural virtues. In a certain sense, the divine good might also be called a common good (quoddam bonum commune). But the object of charity is, of course, not a common good; rather it is the divine good («Bonum commune non est obiectum caritatis, sed summum bonum.» Q. D. De Caritate, 5 ad 4). Considered as a common good, the highest good of the Heavenly City would be, indeed, the object of supernatural general justice, not of charity. Charity and justice must not be confused.—It is very significant that St. Thomas chooses to say bonum commune toti societati (caelesti) instead of bonum commune totius societatis, as he usually does when speaking in terms of political philosophy.—DM, 194-195.

Just what does my Opponent mean by a «common good, constituting, first and foremost, a society»? Is he again forcing upon me his own totalitarian notion of common good and society? From the section of the text which he does not quote, it is clear what St. Thomas means by «amor boni communis toti societati, quod est bonum divinum, prout est beatitudinis objectum». The article aims to show «quod caritas absque dubio virtus est». (Ibid., circa princ). A virtue requires the love of the good for which it operates. But the supernatural divine good cannot be reached by a natural virtue and hence the necessity of the infused virtues, «ad quarum debitam operationem præxigitur amor boni communis toti societati, quod est bonum divinum, prout est beatitudinis objectum». And this is the good which is the proper object of the virtue of charity. Now, because this divine good, prout est beatitudinis objectum, is a common good, it is not to be loved merely «ut habeatur et possideatur», for the evil, too, desire it in this manner, and such love of the divine good is not charity. If St. Thomas understood the expression «bonum commune toti societati» in Father Eschmann's sense, his reasoning, besides using four terms, would prove that charity is a virtue by means of a secondary object, namely, the love of our neighbour. Furthermore, the obligation to love our neighbour is not the reason why the divine good is a common good; nor does it become a common good because of the actual existence of the «beata societas», but because the object of charity is a common good, that is, a good which because of its very superabundance is communicable to others, and because it is «secundum se» communicable to others we must also love all those who are capable of beatitude. The principal object of charity is thus the reason of the secondary object. And this reason why we must love our neighbour is prior to our neighbour as well as to our act of loving him. Because the love of our neighbour follows from the true love of God, the former is, for us, a test of the latter. Unless we love God «secundum se, ut permanent et diffundatur»—and this means to love Him as a common good, we simply do not love Him by charity. We must love the universal good as a common good, otherwise we shall not truly love the universal good; we shall love it merely «ut habeatur et possideatur», that is, in the manner in which «etiam mali illud bonum concupiscunt».

Father Eschmann suggests that «the example of the city is only used as an argumentum ad hominem». Setting aside the problem of the identity of the homo to whom it is said to be addressed, let us merely try to determine what St. Thomas is seeking to prove in this article. He is teaching that charity is a virtue: «quod caritas non solum est virtus, sed potissima virtutum» (Ibid., in fine). Now he plainly must have some reason for using the example of the city. The comparison between the earthly city and the heavenly must strengthen his argument in some way. It follows that, in his mind, the two have something in common; and, in fact, they must have something in common if his proof is to be valid. In a word, what St. Thomas establishes here is that the divine good, prout est beatitudinis objectum, must be loved as the good citizen loves the good of the earthly city; and this means that it must be loved «ut permanent et diffundatur», and not, like the tyrant, «ut habeatur et possideatur».

My Opponent's «quoddam bonum commune» and his «bonum commune non est obiectum caritatis» have been sufficiently exposed. So, let us pass immediately to what he says regarding supernatural general justice. When he writes off-hand: «Considered as a common good, the highest good of the Heavenly City would be, indeed, the object of supernatural general justice, not of charity», he reveals a strange understanding of the nature and object of infused moral virtues, «per quas homines bene se habent in ordine ad hoc quod sint cives sanctorum et domesticæ Dei»¹. Since infused general justice is not a theological virtue, God could not possibly be that common good which is the object of justice. God is the norm and the ultimate end of infused justice, but this does not make Him its object. In the text under discussion, St. Thomas is speaking of the proper object of the theological virtue of charity, of the amor boni communis toti societati, quod [bonum commune] est bonum divinum, prout est beatitudinis obiectum. By this virtue we love the divine good (secundum se, ut permaneat et diffundatur)—et hæc est caritas, quæ Deum per se diligit, et proximos qui sunt capaces beatitudinis, sicut seipsum. And this has formally nothing to do with any kind of justice. Nor has charity toward our neighbour anything to do, in the present discussion, with the proper object of justice whether acquired or infused. Even in the love of our neighbour the divine good is the (ratio formalis obiecti).

... Caritas in diligendo proximum habet Deum ut rationem formalem obiecti, et non solum ut finem ultimum, ut ex supradictis, art. præc., patet; sed alie virtutes habent Deum non ut rationem formalem obiecti, sed ut ultimum finem; et ideo, cum dicatur quod caritas diligit proximum propter Deum, illud propter denotat non solum causam materiale, sed quodammodo formalem. Cum autem dicatur de aliis virtutibus quod operantur propter Deum, illud propter denotat causam finalem tantum 1.

If, as my Opponent suggests, the distinction between «bonum commune toti societati» and «bonum commune totius societatis» is significant, its significance would be to bring out more clearly that we are treating of the separated common good which is the object of charity, and not of the intrinsic, created, finite common good of the heavenly city toward which we become well disposed by the infused moral virtues.

Was it the Theif! Thief! method which prompted my Opponent to say that,

Strictly speaking, the disclosure of such an inept method of dealing with a text would authorize us in taking no further account whatsoever either of this excerpt or of the teaching based upon it.—DM, 104.

Father Eschmann is ineffable.

Indeed I recognize the distinct though unenvied polemic advantage of his faulty Latin, his shallow acquaintance with philosophy and theology when allied to such unclouded confidence. His article has produced the proper rejoicing in personalist quarters, but what is more important, it has disturbed and poisoned by anticipation the mind of many an unsuspecting reader unable to see through the sham of his legerdemain with the littera Sancti Thomæ. After all, even if his cliché sneers are discreditabile, who could still hold that the object of the virtue of charity is the divine good as a common good, now that Father Eschmann has produced the trenchant littera Sancti Thomæ: «Bonum commune non est obiectum caritatis, sed summum bonum»? However, even if there were no point in trying to refute my Opponent for his own sake, it would be unfair to let the unsuspecting reader be misled by his pretence. My persistence in demolishing his criticisms, which I can hardly do without disclosing his own method, will be thought merciless perhaps and surely dull, yet I must pursue this course, lest I should seem to be evading difficulties and leaving unanswered such accusations as:

In setting up a «principle of the New Order» Professor De K. has done a work which is—shall we say—surprisingly radical and daring: he has at the same time taken in his stride a new foundation of Christian ethics and moral theology.—DM, 196. 1.

We can all agree that the accusation is not lacking in gravity, at least insofar as it concerns the truth of the doctrine I defend. Let us examine his reasons.

VI. «BONUM UNIVERSALE IN ESSENDO» AND «BONUM UNIVERSALE IN CAUSANDO»

Immediately following his hopelessly muddled exegesis of St. Thomas' text (De Caritate, a.2, c.) Father Eschmann goes on to say:

May the patient reader excuse the length to which this exegetical problem has obliged us to go. Let us now turn back to the substance of Prof. De K.'s teaching. Is it not the most fundamental and absolutely unshakable cornerstone of Christian ethics that the term of our ordination to God is God as He is in Himself, i.e. the Good by His essence and the essence of goodness (bonum universale in essendo)? Is it not the very first care of a Christian citizen to make sure that the conclusion of his very first argument directly reaches this bonum universale in essendo? This, at least, is the content and intention of that great argument which opens the pars moralis of the Summa (I-II, 1, 1-2, 8) and whose conclusion is: «Ex quo patet quod nihil potest quietare voluntatem hominis nisi bonum universale, quod non invenitur in aliquo creato, sed solum in Deo, quia omnis creatura habet bonitatem participatam» (ibid., 2, 8.). St. Thomas has here completely forgotten to speak about Professor De K.'s «common goods» by which man's ordination to God is très formellement determined. I am afraid that on pages 26-27 of this book a suspicion which the expert reader has felt all the way along, from the first page on, becomes definite, namely that the author has pushed the primacy of the common good very far, so far indeed that, if the consequences of his position are made explicit, we must in our Christian ethics re-do our work from the beginning. In setting up a «principle of the New Order» Professor De K. has done a work which is—shall we say—surprisingly radical and daring: he has at the same time taken in his stride a new foundation of Christian ethics and moral theology.

Professor De K. has confused bonum universale in essendo and bonum universale in causando. «The creature,» St. Thomas says (Summa, I, 103, 4), «is assimilated to God in two respects: first, with regard to this that God is good; and thus the creature becomes like Him by being good; and, secondly, with regard to this that God is the cause of goodness in others; and thus the creature becomes like God by causing others to be good.»—The common good, and every common good, is formally bonum universale in causando: it is not, formally, bonum universale in essendo.

The very first and essential element of our ordination to God is not the fact that God is the first bonum universale in causando, the fountain of all communications, but that He is the bonum universale in essendo.—DM, 195-196.

When we first read that God is «the Good by His essence and the essence of goodness» and that this is the bonum universale in essendo, we might think we know what Father Eschmann is talking about. But when he opposes this to the bonum universale in causando we may well wonder whether he himself knows what he is talking about. My Opponent's argumentation is so confused that, in order to unravel it and arrest the possible meaning of his terms, we must beg leave to make several distinctions.

I. Father Eschmann's quotation, «principle of the New Order», is an allusion to the title of the second part of my book which is mainly concerned with marxist radicalism and nihilism as a logical outcome of the exaltation of the self, and it is this I call Le principe de l'ordre nouveau, as opposed to the principle of the order of Redemption—humility and divine Mercy.

Let us first consider the more elementary distinction between bonum in essendo and bonum in causando. Bonum in essendo may be used to mean bonum per essentialitatem. And this in turn may be understood to mean bonum a se as opposed to bonum ab alio or per participationem; again it may mean bonum per se as opposed to bonum secundum quid. There is yet another meaning of bonum in essendo, namely, the good that a thing is in so far as it is. In this case, bonum in essendo is not opposed to bonum per se, unless we understand it to mean in essendo tantum. For, in the creature, the good that it is from the mere fact that it is and that it has substantial being, is only bonum secundum quid, whereas it will be good per se or simpliciter only according to added perfections which, from the viewpoint of being, are accidental¹.

Since Father Eschmann opposes bonum universale in essendo to bonum universale in causando, let us now consider what bonum in causando may mean.—In De Veritate, q. 1, a. 1, c., St. Thomas says:

[Modus generaliter consequens omne ens] dupliciter accipi potest: uno modo secundum quod consequitur unumquodque ens in se; alio modo secundum quod consequitur unumquodque ens in ordine ad aliud. Si autem modus entis accipitur secundum modo, scilicet secundum ordinem unius ad alterum, hoc potest esse dupliciter: Uno modo, scilicet secundum ordinem unius ab altero; . . . Alio modo, secundum conventionem unius entis ad aliud; et hoc quidem non potest esse nisi accipiatur aliquid quod tantum sit convenire cum omni ente. Hoc autem est anima, que cognominata est anima, sicut dicitur in III De Anima (text. 37). In anima autem est vis cognitiva et appetitiva. Conventio enim ergo entis ad appetitum exprimit hoc nomen bonum, ut in principio Ethic. dicitur: Bonum est quod omnia appetant. Conventio autem vero entis ad intellectum exprimit hoc nomen verum.

In q. 21, a. 1, c., of the same work, St. Thomas goes further into this matter:

. . . Verum et bonum super intellectum entis [addunt] respectum perfectivi. In quolibet autem ente est duo considerare: scilicet ipsam rationem speciei, et esse ipsum quo aliquid aliud subsistit in specie illa; et sic aliquid ens potest esse perfectum dupliciter. Uno modo secundum rationem speciei tantum; et sic ab ente perfectum intellectus, qui perfectus per rationem entis; nec tamen ens est in eo secundum esse naturale; et ideo hunc modum perfectivi dicitur verum super ens. Verum enim est in mente, ut Philosophus dicit in VI Metaph.; et unumquodque ens in tantum dicitur verum, in quantum conformatum est vel conformabile intellectui; et ideo omnes recte definites verum, ponunt in eius definitione intellectum. Alio modo ens est perfectum alterius non solum secundum rationem speciei, sed etiam secundum esse quod habet in rerum natura: et per hunc modum est perfectivum bonum; bonum enim in rebus est, ut Philosophus dicit in VI Metaph. (com. 8). In quantum autem unum ens est secundum esse suum perfectivum alterius et conservativum, habet rationem finis respectu illius quod ab eo perfectitur; et inde est quod omnes recte definites bonum ponunt in ratione eius aliquid quod pertinet ad habitum finis; unde Philosophus dicit in I Ethic. (in princip.), quod bonum optime definitur dicentes, quod bonum est quod omnia appetant.

And in the body of the following article he adds:

. . . Cum ratio boni in hoc consistat quod aliquid sit perfectivum alterius per modum finis, omne id quod invenitur habere rationem finis, habet et rationem boni.

1. For these distinctions as well as for their application to God, see, more particularly, Ia, q. 5, a. 1, ad 1; a. 3; De Div. Nom., c. 4, lect. 16; In Boetium de Hebdomadibus, o.; De Ver., q. 21, passim.

From this it should be clear that the most proper and profound meaning of the term «good» is: perfectivum alterius per modum finis. Now, if such is the very ratio boni, the divine good will be called good in the strict sense of the word only insofar as it is perfectivum alterius per modum finis, that is, because of the conventio ad appetitum. As it is in itself, the divine good may be considered either with respect to the divine will, or with respect to a created will elevated by the infused virtue of charity. Obviously, when we consider the divine good with respect to the divine will, the term finis cannot be taken in the strict sense of final cause, since causality involves dependence. In this case, «perfectivum alterius per modum finis» or «aliquid quod pertinet ad rationem finis», merely express the proper perfection of the good which draws and attracts the will toward it as to its proper object. This «drawing toward» and «attracting» involves no potentiality on the part of the divine will. The first article of De Veritate, q. 23: Utrum Deo conventio voluntatem habere, contains the following objection and answer:

3. Præterea, ei quod non habet aliquam causam, non competit aliquid quod importet respectum ad causam. Sed Deus, cum sit prima causa omnium, non habet aliquam causam. Ergo, cum voluntas importet habitudinem in causam finalem, quia voluntas est finis, secundum Philosophum in III Ethic. (c. 1, ante med.), videtur quod voluntas Deo non competat.

Ad tertium dicendum, quod voluntas est alicuius dupliciter; uno modo principaliter, et alio modo secundario. Principaliter quidem voluntas est finis, qui est ratio volendi omnia alia; secundario autem est eorum que sunt ad finem, que propter finem voluntas. Voluntas autem non habet habitudinem ad voluntum quod est secundarium, sicut ad causam; sed tantummodo ad voluntum principalem, quod est finis. Secundum est autem, quod voluntas dicitur secundum rationem, quod est finis, et tunc volitum comparatur ad voluntatem sicut relictur causa finalis. Si autem voluntas dicitur secundum rationem tantum ratione, tunc volitum non erit causa finalis voluntatis nisi eandem modum significandi. Voluntas ergo quod sua voluntas; sicut ad finem, ad bonitatem suam, que secundum rem item est quod sua voluntas; distinguatur autem solum secundum modum significandi. Unde relinquatur quod voluntatis divine nihil sit causa realiter, sed solum secundum modum significandi. Nec est inconveniens, id Deo significari aliquid per modum cause; sic enim divinitus significatur in Deo ut habens se ad Deum per modum cause formalis. Res vero create, quas Deus vult, non se habent ad divinam voluntatem ut finis, sed ut ordinata ad finem; propter hoc enim Deus creaturas vult esse, ut in eis sua bonitas manifestetur, et ut sua bonitas, que per essentiam multiplicari non potest, saltem similitudinis participatione in plures effundatur.

Hence, when we consider the divine good with respect to the created will, it is an end in the strict sense of the word, a final cause attained as «ratio formalis objecti». Accordingly, to deny that the divine good is in this respect a good «sicut realiter causa finalis», is to imply that the created will is not merely on a plane with the divine will, but that it is identical with the divine good and will.

Again the good may be called bonum in causando in two ways: either to mean the good as a final cause, i.e. «perfectivum alterius per modum finis»; or to signify the good as an efficient and exemplary cause of another good. Both meanings apply to God. As the good of His will («per modum finis»), He attracts all things as their ultimate end; and as the divine good to be attained as it is in itself by the rational creature, He is the «ratio formalis objecti» of charity. In the second sense, He is a bonum in cau- sando as the exemplary and efficient cause of all created goodness. Hence, God may be loved as He is in Himself, or again we may love His goodness as exemplified in the finite good of which He is final, exemplary and efficient cause.¹

When we oppose bonum in essendo to bonum in causando, the former can mean either of two things: the perfection of a being considered absolutely, as formally constitutive of that being, and this meaning prescinds from the good as «perfectivum alterius per modum finis» (for the good proper «non solum habet rationem perfecti, sed perfectivi»);² or it may mean the good that a being is from the mere fact that it is, and this signification prescinds from the distinction between bonum per se and bonum per accidens. When bonum in essendo is taken in the latter sense and opposed to bonum in causando, it can once more have only two possible meanings: the good as a commune in prædicando,³ which is not the object of appetite and hence not a good at all in the proper sense; or it may mean bonum in essendo tantum, as opposed to that bonum per se which is found in creatures, and which is really bonum per accidens of the created ens per se. Now this last significance of bonum in essendo does not permit it to be a good in the full sense of the word, either, for secundum esse substantiale non dicitur aliquid bonum simpliciter et absolute, nisi superaddantur perfectiones aliæ debite: et ideo ipsum esse substantiale non est absolute appetibile nisi debitis perfectionibus adjunctis.⁴

Let us now consider the expressions bonum universale in essendo and bonum universale in causando. The former may bear three distinct meanings: first, it may be taken to mean bonum universale in prædicando which is common to all things insofar as they are good in any way; secondly, it may mean the perfection of divine being considered in itself without formal reference to will; thirdly, it may mean bonum universale per essentiam, where the good is understood in the rigorous sense of «perfectivum alterius per modum finis», and this is the divine good, for God is good simpliciter by His very essence, «in quantum ejus essentia est suum esse».⁵

Bonum universale in causando may mean the divine good considered according to the strict formality of the good, i.e. as «perfectivum alterius per modum finis». It has already been emphasized that, when so considered with respect to the divine will, the divine good is a final cause only («secundum modum significandi», because in God, «voluntas et volitum distinguuntur tantum ratione»). However, unless we use this «modus

1. A similar distinction applies even to our present knowledge of God. Metaphysics can reach God only insofar as He is known through the creatures, whereas faith and theology concern God as He is in Himself. (See a similar doctrine propounded by Aquinas in the Summa Theologiae, I-II, q. 12, a. 2, ad 2.)
2. Ibid., q. 21, a. 4, c.
3. Ibid., q. 22, a. 1, ad 7.
4. Ibid., q. 21, a. 5, c.; Ia, q. 6, a. 3.
5. Ibid., q. 21, a. 5, c.; Ia, q. 6, a. 3.

significandi», we do not express the proper formality of the good. But the divine good becomes a final cause in the strict sense of «cause», when considered with respect to a will which is not identical with the divine good: «voluntas et volitum aliquando distinguuntur secundum rem: et tunc volitum comparatur ad voluntatem sicut realiter causa finalis». In either case, however, God is called bonum universale in causando, and this term is opposed to the second meaning of bonum universale in essendo. Finally, the same expression—bonum universale in causando, may also be used to signify the divine good as the universal effective and exemplary cause of all created goodness.

Hence, bonum universale in essendo understood in its third sense and bonum universale in causando taken in its first sense are the same thing, the only difference being that the former expresses the identity of divine goodness and divine being: the latter brings out the proper formality of the divine good as final cause, either «per modum significandi», or «sicut realiter causa finalis». When we oppose the two and apply them to God, then bonum universale in essendo must be taken in the second sense, which prescinds from the proper formality of the good as «perfectivum alterius per modum finis».

And now let us examine Father Eschmann's reasoning more closely. In forma, it amounts to this: The term of our ordination to God is bonum universale in essendo. But bonum universale in essendo is not bonum universale in causando. Therefore, the term of our ordination to God is not bonum universale in causando.

To this we answer that if bonum universale in essendo means bonum per essentiam, and bonum universale in causando means bonum universale per modum finis, the major of the argument is true, but the minor is false. If, on the contrary, bonum universale in essendo is taken to mean the perfection of divine being considered absolutely, i.e. prescinding from the formality: «perfectivum alterius per modum finis», the minor is true, but the major is false. In either case, the conclusion is null.—When Father Eschmann uses the expression bonum universale in causando to mean the divine good as exemplified in the goodness of which it is the cause, he evades the issue and is tilting at windmills.

Let us examine the text, together with its context, which may Opponent quotes in support of his distinction between bonum universale in essendo and bonum universale in causando. The problem is: Utrum effectus gubernationis sit unus tantum, et non plures.

Respondedo dicendum quod effectus cujuslibet actionis ex fine ejus pensari potest: nam per operationem efficitur ut pertingatur ad finem. Finis autem gubernationis mundi est bonum essentialis, ad cuius participationem et assimilationem omnia tendunt. Effectus igitur gubernationis potest accipi tripliciter. Uno modo, ex parte ipsius finis: et sic est unus effectus gubernationis, scilicet assimilari summo bono.—Alio modo potest considerari effectus gubernationis secundum ea quibus ad Dei assimilationem creatura pertingitur. Et sic in generali sunt duo effectus gubernationis. Creatura enim assimilatur Deo quantum ad duo: scilicet quantum ad id quod Deus bonus est, in quantum creatura est bona; et quantum ad hoc quod Deus est alius causa bonitatis, in quantum una creatura movet aliam ad bonitatem. Unde duo sunt.

effectus gubernationis: scilicet conservatio rerum in bono, et motio earum ad bonum. — Tertio modo potest considerari effectus gubernationis in particulari: et sic sunt nobis innumerabiles¹.

Obviously, our problem is related to the first consideration of the effect of divine government, that is, of the effect, «ex parte finis»: scilicet assimilari summo bono, where the supreme good is bonum universale in causando per modum finis. We are not now concerned with the effect of divine government (secundum ea quibus ad Dei assimilationem creatura perducitur), that is, whereby the creature is assimilated to God insofar as the creature itself is a good, and by its own goodness is enabled to move another toward the good. The following text deals with the principle of this inherent goodness:

... Omne agens inventur sibi simile agere; unde si prima bonitas sit effectiva omnium bonorum, oportet quod similitudinem suam imprimat in rebus effectis; et sic unumquodque dicitur bonum sicut forma inherente per similitudinem summi boni sibi inditam, et ulterius per bonitatem primam, sicut per exemplar et effectum *omnis bonitatis creatæ*².

But we are concerned with an assimilation of the creature to God which is not mentioned in the portion of St. Thomas' text brought forth by Father Eschmann. The following passage from De Veritate, q. 20, a. 4, c., describes the latter assimilation (which had been briefly stated in that first portion of the text not quoted by my Opponent) while carefully distinguishing it from the former:

... Cum Deus sit principium omnium rerum et finis; duplex habitudo ipsius ad creaturas invenitur: una secundum quam omnia a Deo procedunt in esse; alia secundum quam ad eum ordinantur et in finem; quedam per viam assimilationis tantum, sicut rationales creature; quedam vero tam per viam assimilationis, quam per viam ad ipsam divinam essentiam. Cuiuslibet enim creature procedenti a Deo initium est ut in bonum tendat per suam operationem. In cuiuslibet autem boni consecutione creatura Deo assimilatur; sed creature rationales super hoc habent ut ad ipsum Deum cognoscendum et amandum sua operatione pertingant; unde præ ceteris creaturis beatitudinis sunt capaces.

In utraque autem prædictarum habitudinum invenitur creaturas Creator excedere. Quantum ad primam quidem, quod super omnia que Deus fecit, adhuc possit alia, dissimilia facere, et novas species et nova genera, et alios mundos; nec unquam id quod factum est, facientis virtutem adæquare potest. Quantum vero ad secundam, quia creatura quantumcumque fiat boni particeps, nunquam tamen pertingit ad hoc quod Dei bonitatem adæquet. Quantumcumque etiam creatura rationabilis Deum cognoscit et amat, nunquam tamen ita perfecte eum cognoscit et amat, quantum ipse cognoscit et ad Deum non reordinatur; ita imperfectus esset creaturarum a Deo caritas, nisi reddito in Deum caritatem adæquaret.

It is surely absurd to suggest that the ultimate end of the rational creature could be that similitude of divine goodness in which its own goodness consists and that highest operation in which it leads to or produces another created good. And yet, if Father Eschmann's quotation is to be relevant to the problem we are treating, he must interpret the quotation to mean exactly that. He cannot mean the divine goodness as it is in itself, since he does not allow the bonum universale in essendo to be «realiter causa finalis».

1. I. q., q. 103, a. 4, c.
2. De Ver., q. 21, a. 4, c.

My Opponent allows us to call God a bonum universale in causando, but by this he means the divine good as the exemplary and efficient cause of the created good. He thereby denies that the divine good is good in the strict sense of the word as «perfectum alterius per modum finis», and that the ultimate good of the rational creature is a final cause in the strict sense. It is this denial which determines his notion of common good. The common good, and every common good, is formally bonum universale in causando: it is not, formally, bonum universale in essendo.—DJF, 196.

Hence, according to Father Eschmann, a good is a common good only insofar as it produces a multiplicity of other goods, and not, formally, in that it is the end of this multiplicity, that is, a good communicable to many per modum finis—an exceedingly shallow understanding of the nature of the common good for a Thomist.

When my Opponent goes on to say that «God is the first bonum universale in causando, the fountain of all communications», what does he mean by «communication»? (Clearly he must understand and restrict it to mean: «effusio secundum quod importat operationem cause efficientis». Yet St. Thomas is quite intolerant of such a narrow concept of the diffusive power of the good, as we have seen in a text already quoted:

... Diffundere, licet secundum proprietatem vocabuli videtur importare operationem cause efficientis, tamen largo modo potest importare habitudinem ejuscumque cause scilicet influere et facere; et alia hujusmodi. Cum autem dicitur quod bonum est diffusivum secundum suam rationem, non est intelligenda effusio secundum quod importat operationem cause efficientis, sed secundum quod importat habitudinem cause finalis; et talis diffusio non est mediante aliqua virtute superaddita. Dicit autem bonum diffusionem cause finalis, et non cause agentis: tum quia efficiens, in quantum hujusmodi, non est rei mensura et perfectio, sed magis initium; tum quia effectus participat causam efficientem secundum assimilationem forme tantum; sed finem consequitur res secundum totum esse suum, et in hoc consistebat ratio boni¹.

It is not, formally, because God produces the good that is the universe or the good seen in any single creature that He is creation's final cause, but because He is the bonum universale in causando for all the good that He produces. His own goodness is the finis cuius gratia, and all being of which He is the efficient and exemplary cause is for this end. If God is a common good in producing the creature, «secundum quod importat operationem cause efficientis», He is, a fortiori, a common good «secundum quod importat habitudinem cause finalis», since the final cause is the causa causarum.

Let us now return to Father Eschmann's text. Immediately following the long passage quoted above, page 47, he writes:

From this it follows that our own (personal) good is a participated good. Through this participation a «certain common good» («quoddam bonum commune») emerges, i.e. a good which, in a certain way, is common to God and the creature. Considering the supernaturally elevated creature, this common good is constitutive for a community or «society» between God and the supernaturally elevated creature, a society which is called, by St. Thomas, societas suæ (i.e. Dei) fratitatis.^{*} It is the divine friendship to whose essential constitution no multitude of creatures is required.^{} The fact that there is such a multitude of creatures does not yet formally come into consideration.

1. De Ver., q. 21, a. 1, ad 4.

This fact becomes only now, i.e. in the third place, relevant. For if^{} there are several creatures sharing in the same participated good they will have something in common. Here, then, there will be a common good properly speaking, i.e. a good pertaining to a multitude of beings in such manner that each and everyone communicates in it. God is, as St. Thomas says, the last common good among men, i.e. that in which they finally must unite: «Homines non univertur inter se nisi in eo quod est commune inter eos. Et hoc est maxime Deus.»^{*}

Professor De K. has, throughout his treatise, neglected these fundamental considerations.—DM, 196-197.

Just what follows and how «it follows that our own (personal) good is a participated good» is not quite clear. What does my Opponent mean by «participated good»? If he uses the expression «our own (personal) good» in the strict sense, that is, for a good which belongs to the person as a personal, proper good and therefore to no other, then the «participated good» is necessarily a created good—created beatitude, the formal, essential beatitude of the created person as distinct from objective beatitude which is God Himself. This formal beatitude is indeed a good which belongs to the person as a purely personal good, in the strict sense, since it consists in the very operation of the intellect by which the divine essence is attained. If this were what Father Eschmann meant by «our own (personal) good» is a participated good», then, when he says: «Through this participation a 'certain common good' («quoddam bonum commune») emerges, i.e. a good which, in a certain way, is common to God and the creature», this «certain common good» could only be a bonum commune in essendo et in prædicando. Now, compared to the common good in the strict sense, that is, bonum commune in causando, the former is indeed a common good only in a certain sense. But such a good is not a good at all in the proper sense and it most certainly is not the good of the societas suæ (i.e. Dei) fratitatis.

If, on the contrary, the phrase «our own (personal) good is a participated good» is used by the author to mean something other than what these words should mean (namely, the imperfect participation «ex parte ipsius participantis, qui quidem ad ipsum objectum beatitudinis secundum seipsum attingit, scilicet Deum, sed imperfecte, per respectum ad modum quo Deus seipso fruitur»¹), that is, if the objective beatitude is called «participated» (by purely extrinsic denomination) insofar as it is the object communicated to the created intellect, but imperfectly, though intuitively, attained by that intellect, it is formalissime a common good. The Summum Bonum, God, the objective beatitude of the supernaturally elevated creature, can never be anything else than a common good because our intellect and will are not identical with the divine intellect and will.

^{*} 22 Sent., d. 26, l. 1 ad 2.

^{} 1^a 2^a Sent., I-II, 4. 8 ad 3.

^{} Alaco. cit.

^{*} «In II Thess., c. 3, lect. 2.»
1. Ia IIæ, q. 5, a. 3, ad 2.

What we must never lose sight of is that our formal beatitude is created and intrinsically participated and that «majus est in se bonum Dei quam participare possumus fruendo ipso». Objective beatitude, in short, is the proper good of God alone. It could not possibly be the common good of God and of the creature unless we used the expression to mean bonum commune in prædicando, which is indeed common good only «in a certain way» since its foundation lies in the identity of the object of the divine beatitude per essentiam and of the created formal beatitude. Hence, whatever Father Eschmann means by «our own (personal) good», the «good which, in a certain way, is common to God and the creature» could be common only according to predication.

We now begin to understand what he means by his «quoddam bonum commune». I say «this», because the term as he uses it has absolutely nothing to do with the text from which it was lifted. The reader will recall the context:

«... Cum in Deo sit unum et idem ejus substantia et bonum commune, omnes qui vident ipsam Dei substantiam, eodem modo dilectionis movetur in ipsum Dei essentiam prout est ab aliis distincta, et secundum quod est quoddam bonum commune. Et quia in quantum est bonum commune, naturaliter amatur ab omnibus; quicumque videt eum per essentiam, impossibile est quin diligat ipsum!»

And this St. Thomas states in connection with the problem: Utrum angelus naturalis dilectione diligat Deum plus quam seipsum. The reader will also remember that he used the same principle («unaqueque pars naturaliter plus amat commune bonum totius quam particulare bonum proprium») to answer the question: Utrum homo debeat ex caritate plus Deum diligere quam seipsum.² Now if we understand St. Thomas' «quoddam bonum commune» in Father Eschmann's sense, the result will be that we will love God more than ourselves, not because He is the bonum universale, to which we are compared as a part, but because the divine good, «in a certain way, is common to God and the creature».—DM, 196. Surely no such reason has ever occurred to St. Thomas! Actually, it would mean that we love ourselves more than God. This alone (that we must love God more than ourselves because of such a community) should be enough to show how preposterous is my Opponent's confident understanding of the littera Sancti Thomæ. I shall not insult the reader's intelligence by drawing out all the ridiculous consequences which would necessarily follow this contradiction, that is, from Father Eschmann's type of «fundamental considerations».

On the basis of a text which he himself invokes and which the reader may recall as used above (page 41) to expose the shallowness of this concept of the common good, still another and perhaps more fatal attack may be made on Father Eschmann's view of what really constitutes the common good. Here are the words of St. Thomas:

1. Ia, q. 60, a. 5, ad 5.
2. IIa IIæ, q. 26, a. 3.

... Perfectio caritatis est essentialis beatitudinis quantum ad dilectionem Dei, non autem quantum ad dilectionem proximi. Unde si esset una sola anima fruens Deo, beata esset, non habens proximum quem diligere. Sed supposito proximo, sequitur dilectio eius ex perfecta dilectione Dei. Unde quasi concomitantiter se habet amicitia ad beatitudinem perfectam.

In Father Eschmann's opinion, a good may be called common only when it is actually communicated to many; its being common depends upon its being actually imparted to a community. In other words, the denomination «common good» is founded, not on the superabundance and incommensurability of the divine good (which, for that very reason, can never be the proper good of any person) but on the fact of a manifold of persons who actually share in this good. According to my Opponent, God is a common good only supposito proximo. Now, since the existence of a neighbour and his sharing in the divine good is not essential to beatitude, it follows that, with respect to the objective beatitude of any single created person, God is a common good only per accidens. That God is a common good, then, merely follows from His decree to beatify, and from the fact of the existence of many persons. For any single person God is a common good only because there happen to be other created persons. The denomination is taken from the existing manifold of the Blessed; it is a purely extrinsic denomination.

This is, inescapably, Father Eschmann's position. It is an opinion wholly in keeping with what he calls «a common good properly speaking».—DM, 196. And it is equally inescapable that if, per impossibile, God were common good in such a sense, i.e. as the proper good of this person and the proper good of that person and so forth, He would be merely bonum commune in predicando. Now, in this sense, He could not be loved by anyone as common good, since bonum commune in predicando cannot be the object of love. Furthermore, when, in loving our neighbour, we want him to share in the divine good, in this respect God would be loved by us as a proper good for our neighbour. But the love of a proper good (which is always a particular good as opposed, not to a good common according to predication, but to a common good in the full sense) for our neighbour proceeds ex amicitia ad seipsum, and not from the common good. And this in turn implies that in loving our neighbour we would love ourselves more than we love God. The following objection and answer taken from Ila I, q. 26, a. 3, bear this out:

... Videtur quod homo non debeat ex caritate plus Deum diligere quam seipsum. Dicit enim Philosophus, in IX Ethic., quod amicabilis quæ sunt ad alterum veniunt ex amicitia quæ sunt ad seipsum. Sed causa est potior effectui. Ergo maior est amicitia hominis ad seipsum quam ad quemcumque alium. Ergo magis se debet diligere quam Deum.

Ad primum dicendum quod Philosophus loquitur de amicitia quæ sunt ad alterum in quo bonum quod est obiectum amicitie invenitur secundum aliquem particularem modum, non autem de amicabilibus quæ sunt ad alterum in quo bonum prædicatum invenitur secundum rationem totius.

St. Thomas is speaking of the theological virtue of charity whose object, even in the love of our neighbour, is God «ut ratio formalis objecti». The paper shortage notwithstanding, I shall again quote the answers to the other two objections from the same article:

Ad secundum dicendum quod bonum totius diligit quidem pater secundum quod est sibi conveniens: non autem ita quod bonum totius ad se referat, sed potius ita quod seipsum referat in bonum totius.

Ad tertium dicendum quod hoc quod aliquis velit frui Deo, pertinet ad anorem quo Deus amatur amore concupiscentie. Magis autem amamus Deum amore amicitie quam amore concupiscentie: quia magis est in se bonum Deum quam participare possessum fruendo ipso. Et iteó simpliciter homo magis diligit Deum ex caritate quam seipsum.

Supposito proximo, we love him by charity because we already love God as a common good. This love of neighbour presupposes the common good as common good. (Obviously, our neighbour is not the formal reason why we love the common good as common good. This principle is true of any love toward our fellowman which has its root in a common good. If the common good is to be loved more than the purely personal good, Cela ne veut pas dire que les autres sont la raison de l'amabilité propre du bien commun; au contraire, sous ce rapport formel, les autres sont aimables en tant qu'ils peuvent participer à ce bien.—BC, 9.

The love of a good which presupposes our neighbour and which radically and formally proceeds from this presupposition alone, is not a love of our neighbour, but for the sake of our neighbour. This love may be generous, but the good which properly depends upon this presupposition alone, «invenitur secundum particularem modum», it is not the «bonum commune totius»; when thus isolated it has formally nothing to do with the divine common good prout est beatitudinis obiectum.

¶ If the divine good is to be loved as a common good only supposito proximo, why is it that we must love that good more than our proper good, and yet, at the same time, love ourselves more than our neighbour? The following objection and answer are taken from Ila I, q. 26, a. 4:

3. Prætereá, I ad Cor. xiii dicitur quod caritas non querit quæ sua sunt. Sed illud maxime amamus cuius bonum maxime querimus. Ergo per caritatem aliquis non amat seipsum magis quam proximum.

Ad tertium dicendum quod, sicut Augustinus dicit, in Regula, quod dicitur Caritas non querit quæ sua sunt, sic intelligitur quia communia propriis anteponit. Semper autem commune bonum est magis amabile unicuique quam proprium bonum; sicut etiam ipsi parti est magis amabile bonum totius quam bonum partiale sui ipsius, ut dictum est.

Ludwig Feuerbach (1804-1872), in Das Wesen des Christenthums, produces the very text Father Eschmann quotes against me from Ia I, q. 4, a. 8 («Si esset una sola anima fruens Deo...») in proof of the opinion held by my Opponent. I quoted this text in my book: Appendice IV, Ludwig Feuerbach interprète saint Thomas. Its complete agreement with Father Eschmann's interpretation is so striking that it is worth quoting again.

Aristoteles sagt bekanntlich ausdrücklich in seiner Politik, dass der Einzelne, weil er für sich selbst nicht sich genüge, sich für die so zum Staate verhalte, wie der Theil zum Ganzen, dass daher der Staat der Natur nach früher sei als die Familie und das Individuum, denn das Ganze sei notwendig früher als der Theil.—Die

Christen aufertern wohl auch «das Individuum», d. h. hier den Einzelnen als Theil dem Ganzen, der Gattung, dem Gemeinwesen auf. Der Theil, sagt der heilige Thomas Aquino, einer der grössten christlichen Denker und Theologen, öffnet sich selbst aus natürlichem Instinkt zur Erhaltung des Ganzen auf. «Jeder Theil liebt von Natur mehr das Ganze als sich selbst. Und jedes Einzelne liebt von Natur mehr das Gut seiner Gattung, als sein einzelnes Gut oder Wohl. Jedes Wesen liebt daher auf seine Weise naturgemäss Gott, als das allgemeine Gut, mehr, als sich selbst.» (Summa P. I. Qu. 60. Art. V.) Die Christen denken daher in dieser Beziehung wie ihr Aeltern. Thomas A. preist (de Regim. Princip. I. III. c. 4) die Römer, das sie ihr Vaterland über alles setzten, seinem Wohl ihr Wohl aufopfertren. Aber alle diese Gedanken und Gesinnungen galten im Christenthum nur auf der Erde, nicht in der Himmelswelt. Als Gegenstand der Theologie ist das Individuum, der Einzelne übernehmlich. Als Gegenstand der Philosophie, insbesondere des göttlichen Wesens, der heidnischen Denker Aristoteles, erklärten, aussondert (Büch. 9. B. 9. K.). Für notwendig zur Glückseligkeit, der christliche Denker Thomas A. aber nicht. Er hielt die ganze Fülle seiner Vollkommenheit in Gott hat (Wohlstand) gleich keinen allein für sich im Genusse Gottes wäre, so wäre sie doch selig. (Wohlstand) gleich keinen also auch in der Glückseligkeit als Einzelnen, als Individuum und deswegen als nachstehend eines andern Wesens seines Gleichen, seiner Gattung, der Christ aber bedarf keines andern Ich, weil er als Individuum zugleich nicht Individuum, sondern Gattung, allgemeines Wesen ist, weil er «die ganze Fülle seiner Vollkommenheit in Gott» d. h. in sich selbst hat»).

Feuerbach, too, believes that when St. Thomas speaks of the ordination of the supernaturally elevated creature to the highest good, he means to deny the primacy of the common good which applies only in the natural order. Feuerbach seems never to have reached the Ila Ila.

We have the right to presume that Father Eschmann read my book. Yet he has completely ignored those passages, some of which I have already quoted, in which I explained why God is a common good in the strict sense and why the created person can never be referred to this good except as a part. I repeated this explanation in connection with Feuerbach's interpretation of St. Thomas:

Feuerbach est obligé de recourir à cette distinction parce qu'il ne voit pas que c'est tout autre chose d'être sous la dépendance du tout et de ses parties pour atteindre le bien du tout, et d'atteindre le bien du tout. La raison fondamentale pour laquelle nous appelons toute personne créée partie, c'est que son plus grand bien est incommensurable au bien de la personne singulière prise comme telle; c'est bien plutôt comme individu que la personne humaine est un tout. Aucune personne créée n'est une nature proportionnée ni proportionnable au bien purement et simplement universel comme à son bien propre en tant que personne singulière. Autrement toute personne serait Dieu. Aussi, pour Feuerbach, l'homme est-il Dieu. —BC, 140.

In drawing this conclusion, the father of Marxist materialism was logical. He had confused bonum universale in causando with bonum universale in prædicando; (BC, 142-143) he was unacquainted with the proper formality of the good. In all fairness we must add that he did not claim to be a Thomist.

In this connection, Gabriel Vasquez' (c.1551-1604) interpretation of St. Thomas may be of even greater interest. The object of his criticism is the following text from Ila Ila, q. 25, a. 1, ad 2.

I. LUDWIG FEUERBACH, Das Wesen des Christenthums, Dritte, umgearbeitete und vermehrte Auflage, Leipzig, Wigand, 1849. Das Ständische Werke, t. VII, p. 212.

Amor respicit bonum in communi, sed honor respicit proprium bonum honorati: defectur enim alicui in testimonium proprie virtutis. Et ideo amor non diversificatur specie propter diversam quantitatē bonitatis diversorum, dummodo referuntur ad aliquod unum bonum commune: sed honor diversificatur secundum propria bona singularium. Unde eadem amore caritatis diligimus omnes proximos inquantum referuntur ad unum bonum commune, quod est Deus: sed diversis honoribus diversis delerimus, secundum propriam virtutem singularium. Et similiter Deo singularem honorem laetrix exhibemus, propter eius singularem virtutem.

Here is Vasquez' paraphrase of this text:

St. Thomas in eo a. 1. ad 2. assignari videtur discrimen inter charitatem et religionem, ut defendat, etiam si diligatur homo eadem charitate propter Deum, nunquam eadem religione propter ipsum. Assertit ergo, amorem versari circa bonum in universum: honorem vero circa bonum proprium eius, quoniam colimus: ideo amorem non esse speciem diversam, propter diversas bonitates partium, dummodo omnes ille referantur ad aliquod unum commune bonum. Quæritur, inquit, claritate eadem diligimus Deum, et proximum, etiam si respiciamus in proximo diversum bonitatem particularem. Quoniam bonum proximi, quod ei volumus, ad commune bonum, quod est Deus, refertur. Honor vero distinguitur ex diversis bonis particulatibus eorum, quos honoramus: quia in bonum particulare semper tendit: ac proinde, cum laetrix respiciat bonum Dei, dicitur autem bonum hominis particulare: fit, ut cultus Dei, et hominis, ad diversas virtutes, non ad unam religionem pertineat.

The relevant section of Vasquez' criticism immediately follows the above paraphrase:

Ego sane fateor meam ingenii tarditatem. Vix enim discrimen hoc mente concipere possum, nequid de illo iudicium ferre, in tam tunc doctrina, primum illud mihi est difficile quod assertit, amorem tantum ferri in bonum universale, cum revera etiam particulare ipsius dilecti respicere possit. Deinde non satis apparet, qui pacto bonum particulare, quod volumus proximo, cum ipsum diligimus, referatur in bonum universale, quod est Deus: sed cultus particularis sancti in cultum et honorem ipsius Dei non referatur: cum verum sit, eum, qui martyrem adorât, ipsum quoque Deum et dominum martyris quodammodo adorare.... 1.

Vasquez does not seem to realize that when the expressions bonum commune or bonum in communi are used to mean bonum commune in prædicando, St. Thomas expressly denies that God is a common good. Father Eschmann attacked me with the text in which St. Thomas uses bonum commune in this sense (in prædicando): (BC, 195). As I have already pointed out, my Opponent in using this text to deny that the object of charity is bonum commune in causando, must suppose that St. Thomas is taking the expression in the latter sense. By this interpretation he not only distorts the meaning of the littera Sancti Thomæ, but at the same time denies that «eodem amore caritatis diligimus omnes proximos, inquantum referuntur ad unum bonum commune, quod est Deus». When he does allow that God is bonum commune in causando—not however as the object of charity, he actually reduces even this common good to a bonum commune in prædicando, for, in his opinion, God is a common good only insofar as He is the proper good of this person and of that person.

John of St. Thomas' answer to Vasquez applies to my Opponent as well:

I. Commentariorum ac Disputationum in Tertiam Partem Sancti Thomæ: Tomus Primus, Antverpiæ, apud Petrum et Joannem Balleros, 1621; q. 25, a. 5, d. 98, c. 2, p. 773.

Respondetur non dixisse S. Thomam, quod amor fertur in bonum universale, hoc est, in bonum universale in essendo, et prædicando (crassa est hæc intelligentia) sed fertur amor in bonum particulare singulare, imo ad personam cum qua habetur amicitia. Dicitur autem ferri in bonum in communium communitate casualibus, non prædicationibus, quatenus scilicet bonum est diffusivum sui, et potest esse ratio formalis objectiva, non solum diligendi se, sed etiam aliud per respectum ad se.¹

Vasquez equally fails to distinguish the divine common good as the effective principle of the created goods, from the common good as that to which the created goods are referred as to their final cause. John of St. Thomas' answer is again to the point:

Divina bonitatis communicatio dupliciter consideratur, et effective, et respectiva: effective quatenus se, vel dona sua creata communicat hominibus, et sic ponit in eis bonitatem intrinsecam, ratione cuius homo est diligibilis ex propria perfectione: respectiva quatenus homo præcise consideratur ut aliquid Dei, et quasi ab extrinseco diligibilis redditur; et hoc modo Deus non consideratur ut bonum conceptum homini, vel donatum illi, sed consideratur ut principale objectum diligibile, et per respectum ad illum diligitur proximus, sicut medicina diligitur ratione salutis, quatenus non attenditur ibi alia ratio diligendi, quam bonitas principalis objecti, et finis non communicata intrinsece mediis, sed respecta a mediis.²

It remains for us to consider the last lines of Father Eschmann's section III («Professor De Koninck's Notion of God»). They are the continuation of the text quoted above, pages 53-54:

Professor De K. has, throughout his treatise, neglected these fundamental considerations. On the very first page of the treatise proper (p. 8) he has omitted to pay due attention to St. Thomas' words: «Dicitur autem hoc [scilicet bonum commune] esse 'divinus' eo quod magis pertinet ad similitudinem Dei, qui est ultima causa omnium bonorum.» Obviously the words «qui est ultima causa omnium bonorum» are, in St. Thomas' mind, restrictive; and if the famous principle, «Sanctus Thomas formalissime loquitur» ever finds its application, it surely does so here. Let us paraphrase: Aristotle gives to a common good the attribute «divine», because this good, being the cause of the particular goods contained in its order and sphere, is in this respect more like God insofar as God is the cause of any and every good. There is, however, another respect to which the above text gives no consideration. This is the likeness to God in itera essendi. And in this respect the speculative intellect being, in the beatific vision, informed by God and most intimately united with Him, is by far superior to anything which is like God in ordine causandi. St. Thomas explicitly states:

Similitudo intellectus practici ad Deum est secundum proportionalitatem, quia scilicet se habet ad suum cognitum [the highest object of the practical intellect is a common good—II-II, 47, 12], sicut Deus ad suum. Sed assimilatio intellectus speculativi ad Deum est secundum unionem vel informationem: QUÆ EST MULTO MAIOR ASSIMILATIO.

These last words are the most concise and the most explicit statement of what we now call Personalism. For, is not this act and good of the speculative intellect a personal good?

Professor De K. has constantly bypassed this most essential thesis of Thomistic ethics and, indeed, of Thomism as a whole.—DM, 197.

Father Eschmann cannot have read carefully «the very first page of the treatise proper», and has perhaps neglected to read in its entirety the text of St. Thomas to which he refers and which I also quoted. The very first lines of what my Opponent calls «the treatise proper» are:

1. Cursus theologicus, ed. Vivès, Parisiis, 1884, t. VII, d. 8, a. 3, n. 12, p. 423.

2. Ibid., n. 13, p. 424.

* «In Eth., 1, 2, ed. Protta n. 30. The next quotation in the article is from the same place.»

Le bien est ce que toutes choses désirent en tant qu'elles désirent leur perfection. Donc, le bien a raison de cause finale. Donc, il est la première des causes, et par conséquent, diffusif de soi.—BC, 7.

And the first lines of St. Thomas' text are:

Manifestum est enim, quod unaqueque causa tanto prior est et potior quanto ad plura se extendit. Unde et bonum, quod habet rationem causæ finalis, tanto potius est quanto ad plura se extendit.¹

To overlook these texts is to neglect the fundamental consideration. Neither Aristotle nor St. Thomas are here speaking of the common good «secundum quod importat operationem causæ efficientis», but of the common good as a final cause, therefore, «secundum quod importat habitudinem causæ finalis». The «ultima causa omnium bonorum» cannot be taken as anything but the final cause of all created good.² The created common good is «more divine» than a proper good of the same order for the very reason that it is a more perfect imitation of the ultimate final cause, which draws all things to itself.³ To suit Father Eschmann's purpose, «the words «qui est ultima causa omnium bonorum» are, in St. Thomas' mind, restrictive; and if the famous principle, «Sanctus Thomas formalissime loquitur» ever finds its application, it surely does so here».—DM, 197. In other words, when St. Thomas, in this very text, speaks of the good «quod habet rationem causæ finalis», he actually means (just for the sake of speaking formalissime) something quite different, namely the good as an «effective» cause of other goods!

Nor does the next development of Father Eschmann's thought seem to represent much of an improvement. The ambiguity of the passage beginning: «There is, however, another respect...» makes it difficult to discuss, but whatever interpretation we put upon it, no acceptable doctrine emerges. If he means that formal beatitude, which is a purely personal proper good, is greater than any created good considered as the cause of

1. In I Ethic., lect. 2, n. 30.

2. «Sed adhuc alia differentia invenitur inter divinam bonitatem et creaturæ bonitas enim habet rationem causæ finalis. Deus autem habet rationem causæ finalis cum sit omnium ultimus finis, sicut et primum principium; ex quo oportet ut omnis alius finis non habeat habitudinem nisi ad ipsum finem nisi secundum ordinem ad causam primam; quia causa secundum non infundit in suum causatum nisi præsupposito iudicio causæ primæ, ut patet in lib. de Causis (prop. I); unde et bonum quod habet rationem finis non potest fieri de creatura, nisi præsupposito ordine creatoris ad creaturam.»—

De Ver., q. 21, a. 3, c. 3.

3. Cum ens dicatur absolute, bonum superaddat habitudinem causæ finalis; ipsa essentia rei absolute considerata sufficit ad hoc quod per eam dicatur aliquid ens, non autem ad hoc quod per eam dicatur aliquid bonum, sicut in aliis fere omnibus causarum, habitudo ad quæ causæ dependet ex habitudine causæ primæ; deum autem finis causæ habet ad quod dependet ex aliquo alio; ita est in causis finalibus, quæ deum finem habet habere habitudinem causæ finalis ex ordine ad ultimum finem. Deum autem ultimus finis habet habere habitudinem ex seipso; et inde est quod essentia Dei, quæ est ultimus finis rerum, sufficit ad hoc quod per eam dicatur Deus, ex qua habet rationem causæ finalis. Et pro tanto dicitur quod creatura non est bona per essentiam, sed per participationem, uno modo scilicet in quantum ipsa esse deum, a qua habet rationem causæ finalis, et alio modo in quantum ipsa esse deum, a qua habet rationem causæ finalis, et ad quem ordinatur ut ad finem; sed secundum alium modum creatura potest dici per essentiam bona, in quantum scilicet essentia creaturæ non invenitur sine habitudine ad Dei bonitatem; et hoc intendit Boetius in lib. de Hebdom.—Ibid., a. 1, ad 1.

3. Metaph., XII, c. 7.

another good, we emphatically agree: «beatitudo . . . quantum ad actum, in creaturis beatis, est summum bonum, non simpliciter, sed in genere bonorum creaturabilium a creatura»¹. But what does this prove except that some created proper good may be better than some created common good? He surely cannot be turning this conclusion against me when I have so plainly exposed this particular brand of sophistry.

La plupart de ces objections jouent donc sur la transgression des genres, elles exploitent le par accidens. De ce que quelque bien privé est meilleur que quelque bien commun, comme c'est le cas de la virginité meilleure que le mariage, on conclut que quelque bien privé est meilleur que le mariage, on conclut que quelque bien privé pris comme bien privé est meilleur que quelque bien commun pris comme bien commun; que le bien privé comme tel peut avoir une éminence qui éclaire au bien commun comme tel, qu'on peut dès lors préférer un bien privé à un bien commun, parce qu'il est privé. Nier par cette voie tous les premiers principes, quoi de plus facile?—BC, 71.

The good which we maintain is greater than the personal good of the Blessed is not a common good of an inferior order but the common good of objective beatitude.

... Il est très vrai que la vie spéculative est solitaire, mais il reste vrai aussi que, même la béatitude souveraine qui consiste dans la vision de Dieu, est essentiellement bien commun. Cette apparente opposition entre la vie solitaire et le bien commun; qui est l'objet de cette vie s'explique du fait que cette félicité peut être considérée, soit de la part de ceux qui en jouissent, soit de la part de l'objet même de cette félicité. Or, cet objet est, de soi, communicable à plusieurs.—BC, 62.

If Father Eschmann should claim that this is not his argument against me, he would have but one alternative: an even more crass sophism. I maintain that objective beatitude can never be other than a common good of the supernaturally elevated person. He tries to prove that it is not. What is the reason he offers? Formal beatitude is a strictly proper good of the person. Does he infer from this that objective beatitude is also a proper good of the created person? This would be a wretched sophism begging a real identity of our formal and objective beatitude; their distinction would be one of reason only. It would mean that the formal beatitude of the creature is wholly commensurate with its objective beatitude; that its formal beatitude is identical with the formal beatitude of God Himself, and that in the beatic vision God and the creature are identified. Then, indeed, God would not be a bonum universale in causando in the strict sense of cause. His essence would not inform the created intellect as a formal extrinsic cause; His goodness would not be «realiter causa finalis» of the created will; He would not even be «quoddam bonum commune» in Father Eschmann's sense.

The reader will recall my Opponent's indictment:

In setting up a «principle of the New Order» Professor De K. has done a work which is—shall we say—surprisingly radical and daring: he has, at the same time taken in his stride a new foundation of Christian ethics and moral theology.—DAM, 196.

Should any doubt remain in the reader's mind, or should he feel, perhaps, that the absurd positions to which we have reduced our Opponent's principles are merely laborious inferences, let him weigh the following paragraphs:

I. Ia, q. 26, a. 3, ad 1.

Objectively, i.e. viewed from the part of its uncreated object, the vision is not a common good; it is not even God as Common Good (to speak of common good in a proper and adequate language) but it is God Himself, the Bonum universale in essendo, as has been shown above.

Formally, i.e. viewed as a created act and good, the vision is that supreme, personal good by which a created intellect, elevated by the light of glory, is most intimately united with, and most perfectly likened to, God.

With these two elements the essence of the vision and of final beatitude is fully circumscribed. No further element needs to be added. No further element pertains to the intrinsic nature of final beatitude.

Eccelestially, however, i.e. in virtue of the fact that there is a multitude of the Blessed sharing, as it were, in the same good, the vision might be called a certain common good which, then, is the constitutive of a certain «society», a society which St. Augustine has called societas fruendi. Deo et vivendi in Deo.^{*} With regard to this society all that St. Thomas has to say is that it quasi concomitanter se habet. . . ad perfectam beatitudinem.^{} because, speaking of the essence of things, every single member of it has his full sufficiency in God and in God alone.—DAM, 202-203.

A simplistic idea could hardly be more simply stated.

VII. «THE CHIEF 'PERSONALIST' TEXT»

Let us examine closely what Father Eschmann calls «the chief 'personalist' text» (DAM, 206), «the most concise and the most explicit statement of what we now call Personalism» (DAM, 197): quæ res nulla major assimilatio. We must attempt to determine, first why this text is produced; why the parenthesis is inserted; what the composite of quotation and parenthesis proves; and, finally, how it may be taken to contradict my position. Father Eschmann desires to show that God, as the object of beatitude, cannot be a common good. Now, if such is to be his conclusion from the quotation and parenthesis, it can follow only from an argumentation which, simplified to its utmost, will go something like this:

I. The object of the practical intellect is an operable good¹. But the common good is the highest object of the practical intellect. Therefore, the common good is an operable good.

II. The operable good is not an object of the speculative intellect. But the common good is an operable good. Therefore, the common good is not an object of the speculative intellect.

III. The common good is an operable good. But God is not an operable good². Therefore, God is not a common good.

* «De Civ. Dei, XIX, 13.»

 «SJ, I-II, 4, 8 ad 3»

1. This proposition must be taken formally.—That which is formally the object of the practical intellect is the operable good, for the operable may be also an object of speculative knowledge: «ut putet se benefactor consideret domum defendendo et dividendo et considerando universa in quædam ipsius. Hoc siquidem est operabilia modo speculativo considerata, et non secundum quod operabilia sunt. . . .»—Ia, q. 14, a. 16, c. The term operabile must be taken for the genus divided into factibile and agibile.

2. When we say that God may be known practically, we do not mean, of course, that He can be a proper object of practical knowledge. As John of St. Thomas explains: «... Licet primum objectum [theologie] quod est Deus, non sit operabile operatione factiva, est tamen admirabile operatione morali per amorem, tanquam finis ultimus et regula actuum nostrorum, et sic practice cognoscibilis.—Cursus theologicus, ed. Solesmi, t. I, d. 2, a. 10, n. 18, p. 400.

IV. The assimilation of the speculative intellect to God is not a common good. But beatitude is «assimilatio intellectus speculativi ad Deum». Therefore, beatitude is not a common good.

Our answer will be brief. We distinguish the minor of the first two arguments and contradicting their conclusion: The common good which is the highest object of the practical intellect is the common operabile good, not the common good which is an intelligible end¹. The same distinction applies to the major of the third argument, and to its conclusion; the minor of this argument we concede. We concede the major of the last argument, and contradicting the minor and the conclusion: if beatitude is taken as it is in the major, i.e. formal beatitude, we agree; if taken to mean the objective beatitude of the creature, we deny.

Father Eschmann may object to the form in which the minor of the first argument is cast: for it states the common good to be the highest object of the practical intellect, whereas his parenthesis ran: «the highest object of the practical intellect is a common good». But the point is that unless he accepts this statement of his premise, he cannot possibly reach that conclusion. It is the interpretation he must put upon his own words.

The text in question might be used to show that formal beatitude is a proper personal good, since the assimilation to God is an operation of the intellect of the Blessed². But if my Opponent merely intends to prove that «this act and good of the speculative intellect [is] a personal good» (DM, 197), in using this text, he is following the most roundabout way one could imagine, and to no purpose, for no one has denied that formal beatitude is a purely personal inherent good of the Blessed. But this is not the end of the matter, for «Actus... noster non ponitur esse beatitudo, nisi ratione suae perfectionis, ex qua habet quod finis exteriori nobilissime conjungatur; et ideo nostrae beatitudinis non sumus nos causa, sed Deus»³. It is that finis exterior, the formal and final cause of beatitude, that we are concerned to explain and defend. And it is this end which Father Eschmann does not want to be a common good.

While Father Eschmann's quotation proves absolutely nothing either for his position or against our own, there does exist a certain correspondence between this text and that on the preceding page which he takes from Ia, q. 103, a. 4, c. But the correspondence is a disturbing one for my Opponent's method as well as for his argument. Let us place side by side the two passages concerned: first that from which is drawn the

1. For the expression finis intelligibilis, see Ia IIæ, q. 3, a. 4.

2. ... Regnum Dei, quasi antonomastice, dupliciter dicitur: quandoque congruatur quoque per fidem ambulatur; et sic Ecclesia militans regnum Dei dicitur: quandoque autem illorum collegium qui jam in fine stabiliti sunt; et sic ipsa Ecclesia triumphans regnum Dei dicitur; et hoc modo esse in regno Dei idem est quod esse in beatitudine. Nec differt, secundum hoc, regnum Dei a beatitudine, nisi sicut differt bonam commane civitatis multitudinis a bono singulari uniuscujusque.—In IV Sent., d. 49, q. 1, a. 2, sol. 3.

3. In IV Sent., d. 49, q. 1, a. 2, sol. 2, ad 2.

excerpt he gives on page 196, and secondly the entire responsio of St. Thomas from which he has selected the quotation on page 197. But first we shall do well to read the objection relatively to this responsio:

... Videtur quod beatitudo consistat in operatione intellectus practici. Finis enim ultimus cujuslibet creature consistit in assimilatione ad Deum. Sed homo magis assimilatur Deo per intellectum practicum, qui est causa rerum intellectuarum, quam per intellectum speculativum, cujus scientia in acceptis rebus. Ergo beatitudo hominis magis consistit in operatione intellectus practici quam speculativi.

And now the two above-mentioned texts:

Ia, q. 103, a. 4, c.:

Effectus igitur gubernationis potest accipi tripliciter. [a] Uno modo ex parte ipsius finis: et sic est unius intellectus practici ad Deum, est secundum gubernationem, scilicet assiduari summo bono. [b]—Alio modo potest considerari effectus gubernationis secundum ea quibus ad Dei assimilationem creatura pervenitur. Et sic in generali sunt duo effectus gubernationis. Creatura enim assimilatur Deo quantum ad duo: [i] scilicet quantum ad it, quod Deus bonus est, in quantum creatura est bona; et [ii] quantum ad hoc quod Deus est alius causa ad bonitatem. Unde duo sunt effectus gubernationis: scilicet conservatio rerum in bono, et motus earum ad bonum. [c]—Tertio modo potest considerari effectus gubernationis in particulari: et sic sunt nobis innumerabiles.

Ia IIæ, q. 3, a. 5:

Ad primum ergo dicendum quod [a] similitudo practica intellectus practici ad Deum, est secundum gubernationem, quia scilicet se habet ad rem; quia scilicet se habet ad suum cognitum, sicut Deus ad intellectum speculativi ad Deum, est secundum unionem vel in formationem; quae est multo major assimilatio.—Et tamen dici potest, quod respectu principis, in quantum una creatura movet causam ad bonitatem. Unde duo sunt effectus gubernationis: scilicet conservatio rerum in bono, et motus earum ad bonum. [c]—Tertio modo potest considerari effectus gubernationis in particulari: et sic sunt nobis innumerabiles.

Clearly, the «similitudo secundum proportionalitatem» in part [a] of the second text is related to [b] of the first, and the practical intellect exemplifies what is said in its subdivision [ii]. It is also clear that the «assimilatio intellectus speculativi ad Deum secundum unionem vel informationem» in [b] of the second text is related to [a] of the first (the clause which our Opponent ignores) and not to subdivision [i] as Father Eschmann supposes when he says: «This is the likeness to God in linea essendi».—DM, 197.

Now, when my Opponent considers the likeness to God in linea essendi as opposed to what he understands by in ordine causandi, he cannot formally consider the assimilation of the speculative intellect to God («secundum unionem vel informationem»); he cannot be considering it under the formality of union and information, but rather under the formal aspect of inherent perfection of the creature. This consideration is quite legitimate? But when we do consider this aspect of the likeness to God,

1. I presume he opposes in linea essendi to causandi alone as understood in subdivision [ii] of the first text, and not to operandi, for, «cum Dei substantia sit eius actus, in linea assimilatio hominis ad Deum est secundum aliquam operationem. Unde, sicut supra dictum est [q. 3, a. 2], felicitas sive beatitudo, per quam homo maxime Deo conformatur, quae est finis humane vite, in operatione consistit».—Ia IIæ, q. 55, a. 2, ad 3.

2. Bonum quod omnia concupiscunt, est esse, ut patet per Boetium in lib. III De Consolat. [pass. x]. Pat. lat., t. LXVIII, col. 763 et seq.; unde ultimum desiderium ab omnibus est esse perfectum, secundum quod est possibile in natura illa. Cuius autem quod habet esse ab alio, perfectionem sui esse ab alio habet: quia tanto perfectius esse recipit unumquodque, quanto verius conjungitur essendi principio, tanto inferiora corpora propter longe distare a primo principio, esse corruptibile habent, ut patet II there cannot be, in this precise respect (that is, in linea essendi), any question of assimilation to God («secundum unionem vel informationem»), although it is because of the union or information that there is a likeness in linea essendi. In other words, the likeness to God is, in this respect, only a «similitudo secundum proportionalitatem», as in the case of the practical intellect. True, even in this respect, it is a much more perfect likeness to God than that of the practical intellect, yet as being merely proportional it is confined to the same genus. But we hasten to add that there remains still the most essential difference between the speculative and the practical intellect: whereas the practical intellect can be only a likeness to God («secundum proportionalitatem»), the speculative intellect can be, profoundly and uniquely, a likeness («secundum unionem vel informationem»). This is, indeed, the basis for St. Thomas' distinction in the second text. And we now see just what is meant by multo major assimilatio.

When we confine ourselves then to the assimilation to God in linea essendi (thus prescinding from the formal extrinsic cause which is absolutely essential in the strictest sense when we speak of assimilation «secundum unionem vel informationem»), we remain within the genus of likeness («secundum proportionalitatem»). Thus Father Eschmann has rather missed the point. Whereas his intention was to show the radical difference between the speculative intellect and the practical, he, in fact, does not use the distinction he quotes from St. Thomas. Although he does not seem to realize it, having confined himself to the linea essendi, he can never reach anything higher than the genus of likeness («secundum proportionalitatem»).

Personalists have been deeply moved by my Opponent's «quæ est multo major assimilatio», printed in capital letters. Yet it is difficult to understand how this may be called «the chief 'personalist' text» and «the most concise and the most explicit statement of what we now call Personalism». It is very true that the «likeness to God in linea essendi» is a wholly personal good (such a likeness is common good only in prædicando). But this is completely beside the point. The question is: Is God a common good? Is objective beatitude a common good?

Yet, per accidens, Father Eschmann has made a distinct contribution. In misinterpreting the littera Sancti Thomæ and in clouding the distinction between the object of beatitude and the act in its relevance to our problem, he has done a good deal to clarify the issue between «Personalism» and the primacy of the common good.

De Generatione, text. 59. Et ideo ultimus finis cuiuslibet rei habentis esse ab alio est duplex: unus exterior, secundum intellectum id quod est desiderata perfectionis principium; alius interior, scilicet ipsa summa perfectio, quam facit conjunctio ad principium. Unde cum beatitudo sit ultimus hominis finis, duplex erit beatitudo: una quæ est in ipso, scilicet quæ est ultima ejus perfectio, ad quam possibile est ipsum pervenire; et hæc est beatitudo creata; alia vero est eterna, per cuius conjunctionem præparata beatitudo in ea causatur; et hæc est beatitudo increata, quæ est ipse Deus. — In IV Sent. d. 49, q. 1, a. 2, sol. 1.

VIII. BEATITUDE, «THE» COMMON GOOD

Section IV («Professor De Koninck on Beatitudes») of my Opponent's article is the one which breathes the most confidence, and which is obviously meant to deliver the coup de grâce. Given his notions of part and whole, of the good and of the common good, of clarity and of beatitude, together with his remarkable ease in dealing with the littera Sancti Thomæ, we can appreciate that it is difficult for him to feel anything but invincible. I venture to add, though, and for the same reasons, that it is equally difficult for him to read my text, much less explain it.

I might further suggest a possible oversight. The Historical Point of View draws its life-blood from the safe absence of the authors it expounds and judges, this being the most imperative condition of its freedom. I, however, am still present to disclose and to protest against my Opponent's distortion of the position I uphold. It may be doubted whether such assurance as his can admit this distinction. But in any case, the misrepresentation of my position is of small consequence in comparison with the doctrine he continues to advance in the name of St. Thomas.

The reader will recall that according to Father Eschmann it is contrary to the very nature of person to be a part of society because a person cannot be part of what is substantially one. But, although contrary to its nature, a person can yet, somehow, be such a part of society. I quote again from DM, 205:

*Ratio partis contrariatur personæ. Hence... the person, qua person, is not a part of society; and if a person is such a part, this «being part» will not be based upon the metaphysical formality and precision of «being person».

As has been pointed out already, the ratio partis St. Thomas indicates in the text my Opponent quotes, is that of a *natura per se*¹. Our contention is that no person can be such a part because this, being contrary to the very nature of person, will imply an absolute contradiction. But what we should like to call attention to at this juncture is Father Eschmann's notion of society. If he understands and means what he says, he is maintaining that a society is substantially one. And however preposterous this may sound, it is nevertheless quite in keeping with his strange notion of common good,² namely, that it is a good not immediately and personally possessed by him who shares in it.

Such being the case, it is strange he does not emphasize that my own notion of common good is contradictory since I insist that the perfect common good is immediately shared by each person of the community, that the one and the other attain it in its very universality; while I yet uphold such a good as a true common good.

* «3 Sent., d. 5, III, 2.»

1. In the sentence immediately preceding the phrase ratio partis contrariatur personæ (In III Sent., d. 5, q. 3, a. 2), St. Thomas says: «claritas est pars humana nature, et non natura quædam per se». How are we to understand «natura quædam per se» here? Does it mean natura per se in a certain sense?

2. When we speak of my Opponent's «notion of common good», we must, of course, prescind from the contradictory statements he makes about the very nature of common good, lest we allow him the impossibility of an «equivocal notion». See below page 69, n. 1.

L'universalité même du bien est principe de béatitude pour la personne singulière. C'est, en effet, en raison de son universalité qu'il peut béatifier la personne singulière.—BC, 26.

Or at least he might have tried to show that the following statement is contradictory:

L'indépendance des personnes les unes des autres dans la vision même n'exclut pas de l'objet cette universalité qui veut dire, pour toute intelligence créée, essentielle communicabilité à plusieurs. Loin de l'exclure, ou d'en faire abstraction, l'indépendance présuppose cette communicabilité.—BC, 62.

While he holds that my notion is contradictory (which means, of course, that it is not a notion at all) he has nowhere even remotely tried to show this to be so. However, he persistently confuses my interpretation with his own, and this makes it quite easy to impose upon me the contradictions which follow from his understanding. Section IV of Father Eschmann's article is a striking instance of this procedure. He assumes that what I mean by part, whole, society and common good are what he means by these terms. As a result, my text, quite logically, is converted into a maze of contradictions.

The misinterpretations in this section IV deserve exposition in some detail. Its opening paragraph is the following:

Ever since the days when Plato stated the problem of the philosophers and kings, every occidental theory of society has ultimately proved its truth and its value by the regard it has paid to, and the place it has left open for, that which is not society nor action, viz. solitude and contemplation. The modern problem which we are now accustomed to state in terms of Person and Society is nothing but the continuation of the age-old discussion of Philosophers and Kings.—DM, 197.

In this connection my Opponent has failed to inform his readers that, not to speak of repeated assertions in the essay he attacks, the second part of my book is entirely devoted to showing the disastrous consequences of La négation de la primauté du spéculatif.—BC, 85-123. And even while quoting my own text, he will argue as if I denied these irrefutable truths: that the ultimate end of the person consists in the vision of God, that the speculative life is solitary, and that the persons are independent of one another in the vision.—BC, 61-62. At times one wonders what type of reader Father Eschmann has in mind. If he presumes, as he surely must, that his reader knows what I actually say (he quotes the text), then the only reasonable thing for him to do would be to point out, simply and clearly, that in maintaining these essential truths I utterly contradict my own position concerning the primacy of the common good. He should not speak as if I denied them. Obviously, the proper course would have been harder to follow than that which he has chosen—it would have compelled him to face the notion of common good.

Immediately following the first paragraph of section IV my Opponent proceeds:

Professor De Koneck will already have surprised the attentive reader by the statement quoted above, that our beatitude is a common good («le bien commun qu'est la béatitude», p.26). Let us have a closer look into this statement!

On page 61 the author compurses (one might be tempted to say concocts) the following «objection» against his thesis of the absolute primacy of «the» common good:

L'ordre pratique est tout entier ordonné à l'ordre spéculatif. Or, le bonheur parfait consiste dans la vie spéculative. Mais, la vie spéculative est solitaire. Donc, le bonheur pratique de la société est ordonné au bonheur spéculatif de la personne singulière.

I. Father Eschmann here adds a footnote (DM, 198, n.24): «Speaking of the Aristotelian eudaimonia, St. Thomas sometimes calls the felicity a common good: «Felicitas autem est finis humanæ speciei, cum omnes homines ipsam naturalem desiderant. Felicitas igitur quoddam commune bonum possibile provenire omnibus hominibus, nisi accedat aliquibus impedimentum quo sint 'orbati'» (Arist., Eth., I, 1098a). Of this is not what Professor De K. means by le bien commun qu'est la béatitude. This Thomistic notion of common good is an analogical and very quæstio nonam. Indeed it is not what I mean by le bien commun qu'est la béatitude. Aristotelian eudaimonia is formal felicity and hence a purely personal good. When Father Eschmann's design in quoting this text? To show that the notion of common good is analogical? If so, his example is the worst he could have chosen, for, if the analogical notion is to embrace what is signified in this text by the expression «quodam commune bonum», then he must understand this good to be a common good in the proper sense, and therefore a good in the proper sense. In the same sense he is using the term «analogie» in an improper sense, in implying that bonum commune is using the term «analogie» for modum finis. Presumably the passage he quotes from Contra Gentes, III, c.38, where St. Thomas shows that human felicity cannot consist in the knowledge of God and in glorious species, pervertent ad finem illius species ut in pluribus: «Et enim que sunt natura, sunt semper vel in pluribus, defectum autem in pluribus propter aliquam naturalem desiderant. Felicitas igitur est quoddam commune bonum possibile provenire omnibus hominibus, nisi accedat aliquibus impedimentum quo sint 'orbati'. Ad prædictum autem cognitionem de Deo habendam per viam demonstratam per se perueniunt, propter impedimenta huius cognitionis, per viam demonstratam per se perueniunt. Non est igitur talis Dei cognitio essentialiter typsa que in principio Liberti perueniunt. Non est igitur talis Dei cognitio essentialiter typsa humana felicitas». Hence St. Thomas is speaking of formal felicity. The sentence «Felicitas igitur sunt orbati» implies a reference to I Ethic., 1099b, where Aristotle says (arguing a fortiori) used by St. Thomas): «Erit autem utriusque et medium disciplinam possibile enim existere omnibus non orbatis ad virtutem per quam he had established et studium». Aristotle is speaking of the felicity whose details he had established in a preceding chapter, and which St. Thomas expresses in the following terms: «Felicitas est operatio propria hominis secundum virtutem in vita perfecta».—Lect. 10, n.130. In the passage «Erit autem utriusque...» St. Thomas' commentary is as follows: himself is one of the causes of his own felicity. «St. Thomas' commentary is as follows: «Ostendit idem [scil. tolerabiliter] dici quod felicitas sit a causa humana] per hoc quod hæc positio conveniat felicitati ut quod utrum illam. Non enim natura deficit ab eo et sit commune aliquod his que habentur in virtute illam. Non enim natura deficit ab eo quod possit esse commune omnibus. Et ut si felicitas est finis humanæ nature, oportet et illud salutaris si sit ex causa humanæ nature. Quia si sit per quamdam disciplinam operandum opera virtutis, vel per defectum naturæ sicut qui sunt naturaliter stulti, et studium, poterit provenire omnibus non habentibus aliquod impedimentum ad aliquid per se malum consuetudinis, vel que imitatur naturam».—Lect. 14, n.170. All these texts concern the felicity which is an inherent, proper good. When this good is called something common, or «quoddam commune bonum», the community is one of the causes of it. But we have already learned that to Father Eschmann this distinction does seem very important.—Regarding his last remark in the footnote above we might suggest, that the analogical notion of the term analogy in an more elusive than he seems to realize. Unless he is using the term analogy in an improper sense, the analogical notion of common good should not possibly comprise both bonum commune in causam and bonum commune in prædicando, since the expression is not formally a good. When used for the one and for the other, the expression «common good» is equivocal, not analogical.

Professor De K.'s answer to this 'objection' is as follows:

Nous répondons que le bonheur pratique de la communauté n'est pas, par soi, ordonné au bonheur spéculatif de la personne singulière, mais au bonheur spéculatif de la personne en tant que membre de la communauté. [Here is quoted Petrus de Alvernia, In VII Pol., lect. 2, § 1. Il serait, en effet, contradictoire qu'un bien commun fût, de soi, ordonné à la personne singulière comme telle. Il est très vrai que la vie spéculative est solitaire, mais il reste vrai aussi que, même la béatitude souveraine qui consiste dans la vision de Dieu, est essentiellement bien commun. Cette apparente opposition entre la vie solitaire et le bien commun, qui est l'objet de cette vie s'explique du fait que cette félicité peut être considérée, soit de la part de ceux qui en jouissent, soit de la part de l'objet même de cette félicité. Or, cet objet est, de soi, communicable à plusieurs. Sous ce rapport, il est le bien spéculatif de la communauté. Le bien commun pratique doit être ordonné à ce bien spéculatif qui s'étend comme bien commun aux personnes. L'indépendance des personnes les unes des autres dans la vision même n'exclut pas de l'objet cette universalité qui veut dire, pour toute intelligence créée, essentielle communicabilité à plusieurs. Loin de l'exclure, ou d'en faire abstraction, l'indépendance présuppose cette communicabilité.

Is this somehow 'magisterial'? Nous répondons in conformity with Master Thomas' famous Respondeo. Dicendum?—DM, 198.

I trust the reader will agree that in this passage I am stating as explicitly as I can that what I mean by the speculative good of the community, is none other than the object of beatitude; and that the apparent opposition between the solitude of the speculative life and the community of its object is due to a failure to distinguish beatitude on the part of those who enjoy it, from beatitude which is the very object. Father Eschmann, though he will mention the distinction, completely ignores its relevance to our problem.

Our formal felicity is not beatitudo per essentiam, but by participation and hence cannot be equal to its cause—objective beatitude. In its incommensurable communicability to many, objective beatitude is numerically one². That it is actually communicated to many does not affect it intrinsically. Even for the creature, the respect of excedens et excessum remains entirely the same. It is for this reason that, as we have already shown, the divine good can only be compared to the creature as the good of the whole to the part, whether other creatures actually exist or not.

Let me attempt to convey this vital truth in terms more unmistakable still. When St. Thomas says that we must love God more than ourselves because He is the «bonum commune omnium», he does not mean that we must love God more than ourselves because He happens to be also the good of this person and of that person, but because He is, by His own goodness, the common good. And that is why St. Thomas can say in a text prescinding from the actual existence of any neighbour, that we must love God more than ourselves because He is the common good of all. It is for the same reason no created person dare think of the divine good as ordered to himself (which he most certainly should do if God were his proper good) but must rather see himself as ordered to God. Let me quote again the second answer from the article: Utrum homo libet ex caritate plus Deum diligere quam seipsum. The objection is based on the assumption: «numquidque diligitur in quantum est proprium bonum».

1. To the reader unacquainted with my book, I should like to point out that Petrus de Alvernia is not quoted in the body of my writing, but in a footnote.—BC, 180-181, n.56. My argument is not based on this footnote, as the reader may verify for my conclusion.

2. «Sicut autem ex modo visionis apparet diversus gradus glorie in Beatis, ita ex eo quod videtur apparere gloria eadem: nam cuiuslibet felicitas ex hoc est quod Dei substantiam videt, ut probatur beatitudinem capium».—Contra Gentes, III, c.58. «In quo etiam considerandum est quod in eodem modo contrarius est ordo corporaliū et spiritalium motuum. Omnium enim corporaliū motuum est idem numero primum subiectum, fines vero diversi. Spiritalium vero motuum, solum intellectualiū apprehensionum et voluntatum, sunt quidem diversa subiecta prima, finis vero numero idem».—Ibid.

Ad secundum dicendum quod bonum totius diligit quidem pars secundum quod est sibi conveniens: non autem ita quod bonum totius in se referat, sed potius ita quod seipsam referat in bonum totius¹.

Does this not make it plain that our own personal speculative felicity must be ordered to its object as to the common good?

The divine good is a common good, not in that it is communicated, but in that it is communicable, to many. It would be unspeakably foolish to think that, because there are many persons participating in the divine good, the object of beatitude and charity is in any way divided or altered, or the immediacy in attaining and loving it is in any way interrupted. Indeed, only because we already love God as the «bonum commune omnium», shall we, consequently, love this and that neighbour. If we did not love our neighbour; if the fact that he too shared in the same numerical good, perhaps to a much greater extent, were either indifferent or repugnant to us, it could only be because we did not love the divine good as a common good, that is, because we would be placing above all else our singularity, and hence, the proper good.

This is the consideration which sustains my answer to the objection which my Opponent terms «concocted». It is an objection which has been often made, however, and which is supposedly based on book X of the Ethics, where Aristotle holds that the man of wisdom, «even when by himself, can contemplate truth, and the better the wiser he is»; (c.7, 1177a30) and also on the Thomistic acceptance of this teaching, which loyally follows the Philosopher. But the felicity in question here is formal felicity; while our problem turns on the one that Father Eschmann has chosen to ignore—objective felicity. Now the question to which we have been unceasingly trying to direct attention is simply, which of these two is the ultimate end? Must the person order himself to objective felicity, or objective felicity to himself? If he is to order himself to objective felicity, that will only be because the latter is not his proper good. If it is not a proper good and yet a good, it can only be a common good.

But when the principle is maintained that the person must order himself to his ultimate end as to a common good, in no way does it follow that this must be a mass movement, so to speak, by the community as a whole.

Nothing obliges us to draw such an absurd conclusion, and I must once more protest against my Opponent's attribution of it to me. Throughout my work I have made it clear that our neighbour does not share in this ordering and that it is rather the task of each individual person. I leave it to my reader then to understand, if he can, how Father Eschmann, after my emphatic statement «Il est très vrai que la vie spéculative est solitaire» and my insistence on «l'indépendance des personnes les unes des autres dans la vision même» can proceed without making any distinction whatever (even after quoting my text!). He should at least, I repeat, allow that when I speak of solitude and independence I am right, although self-contradictory when I hold that these can have anything to do with the common good. But we shall search in vain for any such remark; he simply continues as if I maintained that the associatio of this common good is an associatio communis as opposed to the associatio singularis of the speculative intellect.—DM, 200.

IX. «FIDELISSIMUS DISCIPULUS EJUS»

Let us return to Father Eschmann's text.

Is this somehow «magisterial» Nous répondons in conformity with Master Thomas' famous Respondere. Dicendum?

The «Thomistic» basis for the author's answer is not St. Thomas but Peter of Auvergne. The quotation from this continuator of St. Thomas' Commentary on the Politics is here all the more surprising since for the point in question a rich and authentically Thomistic documentation was at hand. It is, indeed, a fact as un-understandable to any serious Thomistic scholar as it is characteristic for Professor De K.'s scientific methods that at a juncture where the most proper and important point of the whole discussion is under debate—hic Rhodius, sic saluti!—the author completely forgets about St. Thomas. The reader is avid to get good Thomistic bread, but he must content himself with Ersatz.

Peter of Auvergne, as is well known, is a secular priest, a member, in the last decades of the thirteenth century, of the Faculty of Arts at the University of Paris and, at one time, a disciple of St. Thomas, whose lectures he attended in Paris, somewhere between 1269 and 1273. Although, because of his general doctrinal outlook there is no doubt that he must be counted among the representatives of the oldest Thomist school, nevertheless, in every question of detail the quality of his Thomism is a matter, not of assumption, but of examination. For it is not impossible that the Averroistic atmosphere of the Parisian Artists might somehow have colored his doctrine, as it happened, not infrequently in those times, for instance and especially in the case of another Parisian Artist, John Quident, O.P. As long as the notion of a doctrinal source retains any proper and intelligible meaning, it is surely impossible to use Peter of Auvergne unqualifiedly as a Thomistic source; and, let it be noted, the same applies, of course, to Cajetan, John of St. Thomas, etc., commentators whom Professor De K. puts, without any distinction, on equal footing with St. Thomas himself.—DM, 198-199.

But, as I have mentioned already, my reply to that «concocted» objection is in no sense dependent on the authority cited in the footnote. To give the proper argument for a doctrine, and to refer to an author as confirming it, are not quite the same thing. It is probably what Father Eschmann has already done with the littera Sancti Thomæ which now makes it necessary for him to believe that the text of Peter of Auvergne is the only possible Thomistic basis for my reasoning; nevertheless, it is my duty to humbly and stubbornly maintain that this same reasoning is founded on nothing other than the plain words of the Angelic Doctor.

The first two paragraphs of the passage I have quoted need no remark. But a word on Peter of Auvergne, and a few observations on my use of other commentators may perhaps be called for. Who was this Peter of Auvergne? Let it be noted that he was not just another disciple who attended the lectures of St. Thomas. Ptolemy de Lure, the man who was both disciple and confessor of St. Thomas, calls him, with reverence, as it happens, to this same commentary on the Politics, fiditissimus discipulus ejus. As to my dependence on other authors, a scrutiny of the essay which Father Eschmann attacks will reveal that it contains a single quotation from Cajetan (a mere paraphrase), and five quotations from John of St. Thomas. Of the latter, only two actually appear in my own text: the first being a passage which notes the obvious distinction between common good and alien good; the second to show even the temporal common good must be publicly ordained to God. But even if my references to such authorities were as numerous and as important as my critic seems to imply, I could not think myself obliged to apologize for them. Not only do I admit without hesitation a need for the assistance of these great minds, but in relying on them I think I am obeying an authority which not even Father Eschmann would be inclined to reject. In a later chapter we shall see why my Opponent has good reason for urging the reader to be on guard against these famous theologians.

Granted that I do not use the authority of Peter of Auvergne as the basis for my argument, there remains the question why I refer to him at all. The reason is simple enough. They who infer from Aristotle's Ethics that, since the speculative life is solitary, there can be no question of a common good of the speculative life, should be reminded of a passage in the Politics, VII, c.3:

But if these things are well said, and if happiness is to be defined as well-doing, the active life is the best life both for the whole state collectively and for each man individually. But the active life is not necessarily active in relation to other men, as some people think, nor are only those processes of thought active that are pursued for the sake of the objects that result from action, but for more those speculations and thoughts that have their end in themselves and are pursued for their own sake; for the end is to do well, and therefore is a certain form of action. And even with actions done in relation to external objects we predicate action in the full sense chiefly of the master-craftsmen who direct the action by their thoughts.—1325b14-23.

Yet this single passage remains obscure. A consideration made in chapter 2 of the same book will help to determine its meaning:

On the other hand it remains to say whether the happiness of a state is to be pronounced the same as that of each individual man, or whether it is different. Here too the answer is clear: everybody would agree that it is the same; for all those who base the good life upon wealth in the case of the individual, also assign felicity to the state as a whole if it is wealthy; and all who value the life of the tyrant highest, would also say

Sed hoc libros completit Magnus Petrus de Alvernia, fidelissimus discipulus ejus, Magister in Theologia et magnus scriptor. l. that the state which rules the widest empire is the happiest; and if anybody accepts the individual as happy on account of virtue, he will also say that the state which is the better morally is the happier. . . . Now it is clear that the best constitution is the system under which anybody whatsoever would be best off and would live in felicity; but the question is raised even on the part of those who agree that the life accompanied by virtue is the most desirable, whether the life of citizenship and activity is desirable or rather a life released from all external affairs, for example some form of contemplative life, which is said by some to be the only life that is philosophic. For it is manifest that these are the two modes of life principally chosen by the men most ambitious of excelling in virtue, both in past times and at the present day—I mean the life of politics and the life of philosophy. And it makes no little difference which way the truth lies; for assuredly the wise are bound to arrange their affairs in the direction of the better goal—and this applies to the state collectively as well as to the individual human being.—1324a5-33.

So we see that, in this work, while expressly repeating the doctrine of his Ethics, Aristotle nevertheless refers to a contemplative happiness of the community. He does not explain here how there can be such a thing; he does not state the principle. However, the principle which justifies his statement does exist, and it is my claim that upon that principle my own argument is founded.

Now, there exists a Thomistic commentary on this very text, a commentary by Peter of Auvergne, fidèlissimus discipulus of St. Thomas whose lectures he attended. To my mind, it is distinctly 'not impossible' that much of this commentary should reflect what he heard from St. Thomas himself. Yet why should we go into such a matter? Whether the disciple is an authority or not, is surely no question to detain us; our real task is simply to inquire if what he teaches makes good sense. Let us examine what he has to offer us:

... Felicitas est operatio hominis secundum intellectum. In intellectu autem est considerare speculativum, cujus finis est cognitio veritatis, et practicum cujus finis est operatio. Et secundum hoc duplex felicitas assignatur homini. Una speculativa quae est operatio hominis secundum virtutem perfectam contemplativam quae est sapientia. Alia autem practica quae est perfectio hominis secundum perfectam virtutem hominis practicam quae est prudentia. Est autem quaedam operatio secundum prudentiam et speculatio secundum sapientiam hominis secundum seipsum solum. Et est quaedam operatio prudentiae et speculatio totius civitatis; et ideo est quaedam felicitas practica et speculativa quaedam hominis secundum seipsum, et est quaedam felicitas practica totius civitatis et quaedam contemplativa totius civitatis. Felicitas autem speculativa secundum unum hominem melior est practica quae est secundum unum hominem, sicut evidenter docet Aristoteles in decimo Ethicorum; quoniam illa perfectio intellectus eligibilior est quae est respectu objecti magis intelligibilis, quia ratio perfectionis sumitur ex objecto; talis autem est speculativa. Felicitas enim est

1. It seems that besides this continuation of St. Thomas' commentary, Peter wrote his own commentary on the Politiques. «Du commentaire des livres III-VIII de Pierre d'Auvergne, il faut bien distinguer ses Questions sur les livres I-V et VII de la Politique, qui se lisent dans le manuscrit lat. 16089 f. 274-318 de la Biblio. Nat.»—MISER A. PEZIER, Peter de Néoclastrique, 1920, p. 219. MISER M. GRAMANN refers to this commentary in Die Philosophie des Mittelalters, Münster 1931, p. 86; see also MISER A. PEZIER, Le philosophe Pierre d'Auvergne, t. II, p. 230; P. GLOUREUX, Répertoire des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque de la Sorbonne, t. I, p. 415; E. HOCHEZ, La vie et les œuvres de Pierre d'Auvergne, Originaire d'Avignon, 1933, pp. 23 and 29. If these Questions are really a distinct commentary, it would be interesting to compare the two. The whole matter is further complicated by the fact that there were two Peters of Auvergne, which raises a problem of authenticity for the many works attributed to the first, excluding of course those mentioned by Ptolemy. Here, however, we are concerned merely with the internal value of the present commentary which was intended as a continuation of St. Thomas' own.

perfectio intellectus respectu primi et maxime intelligibilis. Felicitas autem practica est perfectio intellectus respectu agibilis ab homine quod deficit; a ratione intelligibilis primi; ergo felicitas contemplativa unius eligibilior est quam felicitas practica; et iterum magis est continua et sufficiens et electabilis hanc quam illa. Et eadem ratio contemplativa totius civitatis eligibilior est quam politica, seu civilis, et contemplativa totius civitatis simpliciter eligibilior est contemplativa, quae est secundum unum; similiter civis practica quae est secundum unum. Et hoc est quod intendebat dicere Aristoteles primo Ethicorum; si idem est uni et civitati, magisque et perfectius quod civitati videtur et suscipere et salvare. Anabile enim et uni, melius vero et divinus genti et civitati. Et ratio huius potest esse, quia contemplativa et civis civitatis comparantur ad contemplativam secundum unum, sicut totum ad partem; totum autem rationem magis perfecti et majoris boni habet quam pars; et ideo ista quam illa.—Lect. 2.

The reader will have noticed the most essential words of this text: «ratio perfectionis sumitur ex objecto; talis autem est speculativa. Felicitas enim est perfectio intellectus respectu primi et maxime intelligibilis», as well as the quotation from the Ethics, I, c. 1, 1094b8. To overlook these phrases, which show us the crucial importance of the object in any analysis of beatitude, is to be led of necessity into a hopeless misunderstanding of the entire passage. Now, throughout his discussion Father Eschmann has missed the relevance of the object; furthermore, as we have already seen, in rejecting the universality of the principle from Ethics, I, he does not appear to have quite grasped its meaning. It was inevitable, then, that he should have nothing but hard words for our fidèlissimus discipulus:

The clumsiness both of the notions themselves and of the whole procedure of combining and comparing them, is at once striking. DM, 199.

Yet one cannot help thinking, however unlikely the possibility, that the writer of this harsh criticism cannot have read the whole of this second lesson. For Peter has already said:

Ab illis qui dicunt optimam vitam hominis esse in optima operatione virtutis, dubitatur utrum vita civilis quae consistit in communicatione civili et activa quae consistit in directione vel ordine operationum quae sunt ad alterum, sit eligibilior, vel illa quae est absoluta a turbatione civili et actionibus exterioribus magis, quam dicitur contemplativam, quam solum intendimus Philosophos intendere.

In an earlier paragraph he has stated:

Cum sint duae vitae hominis magis principales, scilicet practica et speculativa, quae istarum sit eligibilior: utrum illa quae consistit in communicatione civili in simul vivendo civiliter, scilicet activa, vel illa quae peregrina est et absoluta ab huiusmodi communicatione civili, scilicet contemplativa. Vocat autem vitam contemplativam absolutam et peregrinam, quia principaliter consistit in applicatione hominis secundum intellectum ad primum objectum eius et optimum, quae non potest esse sine scotiatione motuum et perturbacionum sine quibus non est vita civilis; et ideo oportet ipsam esse absolutam a communicatione civili; et per consequens peregrinam. Peregrinum enim dicitur quod longe ab habitudine consueta est. Magis autem consueta vita communiter est vita civilis.

There is also the following passage:

Optima autem vita huiusmodi iniustitiam, quae magis accidit in civili communicatione, non habet, quia optima vita nihil praeter rationem habet: igitur optima vita non est civilis, sed absoluta magis.

And finally, in the same lesson, we read this admirable commentary on Aristotle's dictum that the free man is «cause of himself»¹:

1. Metaph., I, c. 2, 982a25.

...Sicut Philosophus dicit in primo Metaphysicæ, liber est qui est suisque causa. Quod non potest intelligi sic quod aliquis sit causa suisque primi, nihil enim est causa sui: sed est intelligendum quod liber sit, qui secundum aliquod proprium sibi est causa sibi operandi. Et tunc veritatem habet quod liber est suisque causa in duplii genere cause: et in ratione agentis, et ratione finis. In ratione agentis, inquantum per aliquod principium quod est principale in eo operatur. In ratione autem finis, inquantum operatur ad finem sibi debitum secundum principium illud. Et quia homo maxime in esse constituitur per intellectum, est enim intellectus, vel maxime secundum intellectum secundum Aristotelem in decimo Ethicorum, et ideo homo liber dicitur, qui per virtutem intellectualem existentem in eo operatur non accipiens ab alio rationem operandi, nec impedimentum habens ex parte materia: et qui operatur ad finem qui debetur ei secundum naturam prædictam. Et quantum magis natus est operari secundum illud quod perfectus est in intellectu in eo, et ad finem excellentiorem secundum idipsum, tanto liberior est. Et ideo qui simpliciter operatur secundum virtutem intellectualem, et ad finem secundum intellectum, perfectissime liber est.

Yet Father Eschmann, without an effort at the least distinction, can impose upon Peter, fidelissimus discipulus of St. Thomas, the stupid opinion that the contemplative life of the community is a «genuine social or common act», an «associatio communis»!—DM, 200. But let us answer the question he raises:

The clumsiness both of the notions themselves and of the whole procedure of combining and comparing them, is at once striking. For, what is this operatio prudentiæ totius civitatis? And if, in spite of the manifest clumsiness of the terminology, an intelligible meaning might finally be discovered in this notion—what in the world can speculatio totius civitatis be?—DM, 199.

Since Peter's critic reluctantly allows that it is not impossible «an intelligible meaning might finally be discovered in this notion» of operatio prudentiæ totius civitatis, we may pass at once to the second question¹. Since Father Eschmann attacks Peter's speculatio totius civitatis chiefly

1. For the reader who may have a particular interest in this principle of the prudentia operation of the City as a whole, here are a few considerations which may be useful first of all to recall what is laid down in In I Ethic., lect. I, already quoted above, p. 17, n. 1. Let him note the lines: «Habet multitudinem et ipsam totam civitatem operantem, que non est unicuique partium, sed totius, puta concitatis totius exercitus. Et tractus natus est operatio multitudinis, non habens autem habet solam ordinem unitatem, et partes ipsius». Hence, if there were no operation proper to the whole, there would be no distinct science of Politics. Immediately following this passage, St. Thomas gives the divisions of moral philosophy. «Et ideo est, quod moralis philosophia in tres partes dividitur. Quarum prima considerat operationes unius hominis ordinatas ad finem, que vocatur monastica. Secunda autem considerat operationes multitudinis domesticæ, que vocatur œconomica. Tertia autem considerat operationes multitudinis civitatis, que vocatur politica. This should take care of the genus cooperatio totius societatis. Now prudence is recta ratio agibilium. In regard to political society, there are two kinds of prudence: the one is called regnativa, that is, the other is called simply, politica, i.e. that prudence of the subjects governed, by which they, freely and in conformity with the government, direct their actions toward the common good. But prudence regnativa, lect. 7; In Ia IIæ, q. 50, aa. 1, 2; In III Sent., d. 33, q. 3, should be done, but in actually commanding what should be done.—In Ia IIæ, q. 47, a. 8. Hence, the operatio prudentiæ totius civitatis will be the prudential operation of society as a whole, involving right reason but on the part of the governing power and of the governed. And to the degree that this is realized there is chance that the community will enjoy what is, in Aristotelian terms, the practical felicitas of the whole society.—On felicitas civitatis, see Sr. THOMAS'S OWN COMMENTARY In II Polit., lect. 2.

in connection with supernatural beatitude, we too shall confine ourselves to this application. But what we shall find is that only St. Thomas' own doctrine explains its meaning.

The very letter of Peter's lesson 2 precludes an associatio communis or «a genuine social or common act». In contemplation itself persons cannot share one another's ordination. The ultimate reason why such a thing is quite impossible must be found in the fundamental distinction between the practical and the speculative good: *Intellectus practicus ordinatur ad bonum quod est extra ipsam: sed intellectus speculativus habet bonum in seipso, scilicet contemplationem veritatis*³. In contemplation, considered as the act of the intellect, each person is more than anywhere else, suiusque causa, as Peter explains. But the object of this act, be it noted, is not just any intelligible good, it is the very highest, the «primum et maxime intelligibile». Now, while the act of contemplation is proper to the knower, the object could not be proper to him, unless he himself were that object. Manifestly, this is out of the question; no facto intellect, not even the soul of Christ, could be thought of as adequate to the object of beatitude².

And now we are again faced with a familiar problem: why did God in His goodness³ and wisdom produce a manifold of intellects? The only acceptable reason is that He wished to communicate Himself abundantly, and that the communication of Himself to a single created intellect could not meet the greatness of His design. He has not chosen to manifest Himself merely to this person, but to many persons. In this respect it is the manifestation of Himself to the manifold which is His primary intention. This does not mean, however, that He manifests Himself to the manifold in such a way that, in this immediate manifestation, the many becomes, as it were one body reaching Him by an associatio communis as opposed to associatio singularis, for He obviously remains the object of this speculative intellect and that. But the Saints in their multitudes are not chosen by God merely that there may be a plurality. Each person is made for Him; no person is made for the other persons. He is not the good of a collectivist community. Yet He is the good of this and of that person. That He can be the good, the infinite good, of this and of that person is not accidental; it is His very nature, whether or not He makes only this person or only that. Hence, when He does make the one and the other, in no sense

1. Ia IIæ, q. 3, a. 5, ad 2.

2. «... Aliquid dicitur perfectum dupliiter: absolute, et secundum quid. Perfectio quidem beatitudinis absoluta est solius Dei: quia solus ipse tantum cognoscit se et amat quantum cognoscibilis est et amabilis (infinite enim cognoscit, et amat infinitam veritatem et bonitatem suam) et quantum ad hoc, ipsum summum bonum, quod est beatitudinis obiectum, et ad est Deus. Secundum quid autem, id est secundum aliquid unum summum bonum, quod est nature et gratiæ; et sic unus potest esse beatorum alio secundum ademptionem huius boni, et capacitatem uniuscuiusque hominis: quia est melius dispositus et ordinatus ad ejus fructum».—In Joann., c. 14, lect. 1.

3. We must not forget that for God the created persons are themselves operabiles, and that they have their root in divine goodness. «... Quamvis possit dici quod in teatur ea [que scilicet regere potest] in sua potentia, quia nihil est quod ipse non possit, tamen accommodatius dicitur quod intuetur ea in sua bonitate, que est finis omnium que ab eo fiunt».—De Ver., q. 2, a. 8, c.

could He be called a common good per accidens. Yet such would be the case if the community of the divine good depended upon the existence of this and that person.

*In domo Patris mei mansiones multæ sunt*¹. The many mansions represent the formal beatitude of the Blessed. But the mansions are the chambers of a single heavenly home. In the passage which follows, St. Thomas shows us how this house of God may be understood in two ways.

[a] . . . Cum unusquisque domus sit in qua habitat, illa dicitur domus Dei in qua habitat Deus; Deus autem habitat in sanctis; Jer. xiv, vers. 9: Tu in nobis es, Domine etc. Sed in quibusdam quibusdam per fidem; II Cor. vi, vers. 16: Inhabitabo in illis, et transibitabo inter eos. In quibusdam vero per fructum perfectam; I Cor. xv, 28: Ut sit Deus omnia in omnibus. Duplex est ergo domus Dei. Una est militans Ecclesia, scilicet congregatio fidelium; I Tim. iii, 15: Ut scias quomodo oporteat te in domo Dei conversari, que est Ecclesia Dei vivi. Et hanc inhabitat Deus per fidem; Apoc. xxi, 3: Ecce tabernaculum Dei cum hominibus, et habitabo in illis. Alia est triumphans, scilicet sanctorum collectio in gloria Patris; Ps. lxxv, 6: Replebitur in bonis domus tua. Sanctum est templum tuum, mirabile in equitate.

[b] . . . Sed domus Patris dicitur non solum illa quam ipse inhabitat, sed etiam ipsemet, quia ipse in seipso est. Et in hac domo nos colligit. Quod autem ipse Deus sit domus, habetur II Cor. v, 1: Domum habemus a Deo, non mansuram, æternam in cælis. Et hæc domus est gloria, que est ipse Deus; Jer. xvii, 12: Solium altitudinis gloriæ tuæ a principio, locus sanctificationis nostræ. Manet autem homo in hoc loco, scilicet Deo, quantum ad voluntatem et affectum per fructum caritatis; Joan. iv, 16: Qui manet in caritate, in Deo manet, et Deus in eo: et quantum ad intellectum per notitiam veritatis, infra xvii, 17: Sanctifica eos in veritate. In hac ergo domo, id est in gloria, que Deus est, mansiones multæ sunt, id est diverse participationes beatitudinis ipsius; quæ quæ plus cognoscit, majorem locum habebit. Diverse ergo participationes divine cognitionis et fructuonis, sunt diverse mansiones².

The mansions are mansions of the same house both in the first meaning of house and in the second, and anyone's formal beatitude is but a single mansion. God Himself dwells in each mansion, yet His dwelling in the house is more abundant than in any single chamber. It is because of the narrowness of the individual mansion that it cannot receive Him in the fullness with which He is received in the house. When He said to His disciples: Where there are two or three gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them, He did not mean that He is not then present to Peter and John, or to John as John; yet He is more fully present then to Peter and John than to either Peter or John alone. And this is the reason why, even in the present life, that is, in the house in which God dwells according to faith, *if two of you shall consent upon earth concerning anything whatsoever they shall ask, it shall be done to them by my Father who is in heaven*³.

So it is in beatitude. Both Peter and John know that it is better that He be present to both together. They see the infinite greatness of God is such that, in truth, it can never be fully manifested neither to one nor the other, nor to both, nor even to all those whom He has chosen. Nor would they see God if they did not see that this goodness is incomprehensible, illimitable. They see that His indwelling in the house which is the Church,

1. Jo., xiv, 2.
2. In Joann., c. 14, lect. 1.
3. Math., xviii, 19-20.

is, absolutely speaking, (eligibilior), because their viewpoint is truly divine. In seeing God, Peter sees what is greater than anything which could be his proper good for he knows that he is only Peter; he sees that God is infinitely more communicable than He is to Peter himself, and it is this infinity of goodness Peter loves, because he loves God in Himself and in that bounty which, of its very nature is diffusive of itself. For this diffusion is not what proceeds from Him, (secundum operationem cause efficientis), it is His own goodness—(propterea est beatitudinis objectum). And if there be also John to share the vision, Peter cannot fail to rejoice, because the superabundance of the divine good is his joy. And if the share of John be greater than his own, Peter will again rejoice, for the prime measure of their happiness is neither Peter nor John, but the immeasurable liberality of the divine good. Yet the one soul does not need the other, for their operation is their own; nor does the one aid the other to see, for God alone encompasses and draws them; and the very immediacy and freedom have their reason in the universality of divine truth and goodness. Even if Peter alone had been chosen, he would know that his is only a mansion in comparison with the House that is God Himself.

Now, the union between the mansions is twofold, according to the twofold meaning of the house of the Father. The first union is because of the identity of the House that is God. For, what the Blessed see and what they enjoy is the same. Et in hac domo nos colligit. This does not mean that the Blessed are present to one another in the primary object of the vision which can be nothing but God alone. Indeed their union would be infinitely less if the Deity Himself, quantum ad id quod notam est sibi soli de seipso, were not exclusively the primary object. This union is the most profound, for it is not merely an effect of the termination of the vision and love of the Blessed in the same object and good, but is founded also in the fact that the object and the good are attained and adhered to in their very universality. Hence, the union because of the identity of the object is incomparably greater than any conceivable union dependent on the Blessed themselves.

The second union of the mansions is in that house which is the Church. Christ, Who according to His divinity is the separated good of the Church, is,

1. «L'Incommunicabilité des personnes dans l'acte de vision rompt-elle l'universalité de l'objet? Et l'amour que suscite cet objet, porté-il sur le bien universel comme tel, ou sur le bien pour son appropriation à la personne singulière? Le bien, est-il comme un bien commun inférieur dont la distribution entraîne, par sa voie de conséquence, une division de lui-même et une particularisation?—BC., 94-96. Et c'est là partie comme telle et ob il perd sa raison de communauté?—BC., 94-96. Et c'est là partie an exemple of this lowest kind of common good. . . . Les deux modes de vision, la particularisation, réduction to proper goods. . . . Yet, in the Blessed Sacrament, under the appearances of this most tenuous form of common good, totius Ecclesie continetur substantiatur in ipso Eucharistie sacramentocausis, non contractus, non divinus: reminded of the Lauda Sion: «A sumente, non quantum isti, tantum ille; nec sumptus integer accipitur. Sumit unus, sumunt multi; quantum isti, tantum ille; nec sumptus consumitur. . . . Fracto donum sacramentum, nec vacilles, sed memento, tantum esse sub fragmento, quantum toto tegitur: Nulla rei fit secessura: signi tantum fit fractura, qua nec status nec statura signat minuitur. . . . Again, we must weigh, in this connection, the words of St. Paul, I Cor. x, 17: Quantum unus panis, unum corpus multi sumus, omnes, qui de uno pane participamus.

according to His humanity the head, the principal member and part of the Church. The mansions are strictly part of this house; the members are strictly members of this body. And in this they communicate directly among themselves extra Verbum. Yet, the ultimate principle of this communion is still the separated good, for, as we read in the Encyclical Mystici Corporis:

... In mystico, de quo agimus, Corpore conspirationi huic internum aliud adiungitur principium, quod tam in universa compage, quam in singulis ejus partibus reapse existens virtuteque pollens, talis est excellentie, ut ratione sui omnia unitatis vincula, quibus vel physicum vel morale corpus copuletur, in immensum prorursus evincat. Hec est, ut supra diximus, aliquid non naturalis, sed superni ordinis, immo in semet ipso infinitam omnino adque increatum: Divinus nempe Spiritus, qui, ut ait Angelicus: «unus et idem numero, totam Ecclesiam replet et unit»¹.

We must note that, whether we compare the mansions to the House that is God or to the house that is the Church, in either case they are mansions, and the mansion of a house is a part. In the first comparison we have the speculatio totius civitatis as the greatest good which God has produced. Yet, we must not consider this speculatio or felicitas absolutely, that is, as the operation and inherent perfection of the created persons. We must consider it in relation to its object and cause. The unity of the divine City is to be sought, not in an absolute comparison of its parts or in their interrelations, but in the identity and universality of the divine good of the City. If we merely consider the parts in their formal beatitude, the good that is common to them is common only according to predication.

And this should suffice to show what is meant by speculatio totius civitatis, and to vindicate Peter of Auvergne who, in this lesson 2 of Politica, VII, is a most faithful disciple of St. Thomas. To see that the common good of the entire heavenly city is «eligibilior», our eye must be fixed on God and on His purpose in creating and choosing, not Peter alone, but Peter and John, and all the mighty host of the Elect.

And now may I be forgiven if I set down once more a passage which Father Eschmann (DM, 193) has spared no effort to ridicule:

L'universalité même du bien est principe de béatitude pour la personne singulière. C'est, en effet, en raison de son universalité qu'il peut béatifier la personne singulière. Et cette communication au bien commun fonde la communication des personnes singulières entre elles extra verbum: le bien commun en tant que bien commun est la racine de cette communication qui ne serait pas possible si le bien divin n'était déjà aimé dans sa communicabilité aux autres: «præexistitur amor boni communis toti societati, quod est bonum divinum, prout est beatitudinis objectum».—BC, 26-27.

X. «UNUSQUISQUE SEIPSUM IN DEUM ORDINAT SICUT PARS ORDINATUR AD BONUM COMMUNE»

In large capital letters Father Eschmann repeats a text from St. Thomas: «ipse solus dirigitur in speculationis finem».—DM, 200. Let us first read the text as he reproduces it. Immediately following his question «... what in the world can speculatio totius civitatis be?», he has this:

¹. Acta Apostolicae Sedis, 20 Julii, 1943, p. 222. Reference to St. THOMAS: De Ver., q. 29, a. 3, c.—Italics mine.

It is exactly this notion which, most unfortunately, Professor De K. has picked out to be the cornerstone of his answer.

St. Thomas speaks quite a different language:

Scit bonum unius consistit in actione et contemplatione, ita et bonum multitudinis, secundum quod contingit multa fieri contemplationi vacare. Hoc est verum, quod... asservit finis quæ intellectus practicus intendit, potest esse propria et communis, inquantum per intellectum practicum aliquis [...] se et alios dirigit in finem, et potest in utroque multitudinis [...]. Sed aliquis ex hoc, quod speculatur, ipse solus dirigitur in speculationis finem. Ipse autem finis intellectus speculativi tantum; præcise non bono intellectus practici, quantum singularis asservit quæ excedit communem assentionem boni intellectus practici. Et hoc perfectissima beatitudo in intellectu speculativo consistit.

How conscientious, how realistic a thinker is young St. Thomas who wrote these passages already in or about 1255 to 1256! He, indeed, never indulges in combining his notions merely for the sake of obtaining some neat scheme, but he examines them with regard to their inner possibility and truth. In the first passage it seems to be evident that St. Thomas somehow inclines towards something like Peter of Auvergne's speculatio totius civitatis. Yet Aquinas at once checks himself by adding, with remarkable finesse: secundum quod contingit multitudinem contemplationi vacare. Is contemplation, as a genuine social or common act, possible at all? In the second text, namely the rector multitudinis (cf. II-II, 47, 12). And St. Thomas now vigorously sets in relief the inner impossibility of an esse vivo communis of the end of the speculative intellect. The words IPSE SOLUS DIRIGITUR IN SPECULATIONIS FINEM and the subsequent statement of the absolute pre-eminence of the SINGULARIS ASSECTIO of the speculative goal—deserve to be written, as a motto, at the head of a treatise of Thomistic social philosophy! And let it be noted that this whole statement is the Thomistic answer to the following argumentum in contrarium which most exactly states the problem of the pretended absolute pre-eminence of the common good:

Videtur quod beatitudo magis consistit in actu intellectus practici quam speculativi. Quanto enim aliquod bonum est commune, tanto est divinius, ut patet in I Eth. Sed bonum intellectus speculativi est singulariter ejus qui speculatur. Bonum autem intellectus practici potest esse commune multorum. Ergo magis consistit beatitudo in intellectu practico quam speculativo.—DM, 199-200.

Overlooking the paper shortage a second time, we shall reproduce Father Eschmann's quotations in the context and order they have in St. Thomas. The first sentence of his first citation is taken from In III Sent., d. 35, q. 1, a. 4, sol. 1, ad 2. First let us read the objection, and then the answer:

Bonum genis divinius est quam bonum unius. Sed vita contemplativa consistit in bono unius hominis, vita activa in bono multorum. Ergo vita activa est nobilior quam contemplativa.

Ad secundum dicendum quod sicut bonum unius consistit in actione et contemplatione, ita et bonum multitudinis, secundum quod contingit multitudinem contemplationi vacare. Sed ad bonum multitudinis pervenitur per regimen activæ vite; unde ex hoc non probatur quod activa sit dignior, sed utilior.

The important point about that reply is that St. Thomas does not distinguish the major. To do so would have been simple; he need only have conceded the major is true of the practical good, and denied that it applies to the speculative. But he did not do so. Why not? Father Eschmann will say that the major of the argumentum in contrarium is a dictum authenticum which, «to a medieval writer, is always true.»—DM, 200, n. 27. We agree that in some circumstances St. Thomas will often concede a statement which he himself would not express in those terms and which, if understood in his own technical language, would mean something quite different. But it would be preposterous to believe that this caution applies here. For, if St. Thomas did not make the distinction defended by Father Eschmann, then, even from Father Eschmann's point of view, it could only be because of the (authority) of this major. Now: what accepted truth can this proposition have been thought to convey? What could it have been taken to mean? There seems no escape from the conclusion that it was understood in St. Thomas' day as meaning that the supremacy of the common good applies both to the practical and the speculative order. Not much remains, then, in the accusation that the «surprisingly radical and daring» work of providing «a new foundation of Christian ethics and moral theology» (DM, 196) by applying this principle to both the practical and the speculative, was undertaken, only toward the middle of the twentieth century.

And now let us revert to the second part of my Opponent's quotation. This time the text is complete. But he quotes first the second part of St. Thomas' reply to an objection quoted in second place, and finally, in a footnote, he produces the first part of the same reply. For the sake of convenience we will reproduce the text in its original order.

Videtur quod beatitudo magis consistat in actu intellectus practici quam speculativi. Quanto enim aliquod bonum est communius tanto est divinius, ut patet in I Ethic., cap. 1. Sed bonum intellectus speculativi est singulariter ejus qui speculatur; bonum autem intellectus practici potest esse commune multorum. Ergo magis consistit beatitudo in intellectu practico quam speculativo.

Ad primum ergo dicendum, quod bonum cui intellectus speculativus conjungitur per cognitionem, est communius bono cui conjungitur intellectus practicus, inquantum intellectus speculativus magis separatur a particulari quam intellectus practicus cuius cognitio in operatione perficitur, quæ in singularibus consistit. Sed hoc est verum quod assecutio finis, ad quem pervenit intellectus speculativus, inquantum huiusmodi est propria assecutio; sed assecutio finis quem intellectus practicus intendit, potest esse propria et communis, inquantum per intellectum practicum aliquis se et alios dirigat in finem, ut patet in rectore multitudinis; sed aliquis ex hoc quod speculatur, ipse singulariter dirigitur in speculationis finem. Ipse autem finis intellectus speculativi tantum preeminet boni intellectus practici quantum singularis assecutio ejus excedit communem assecutionem boni intellectus practici; et ideo perfectissima beatitudo in intellectu speculativo consistit 1.

Again St. Thomas avoids distinguishing the major («Quanto aliquod bonum est communius tanto est divinius»). On the contrary, he shows that the dictum authenticum applies more perfectly to the good of the speculative intellect than to that of the practical. And we must note carefully that St. Thomas calls «communius», not the good which consists in the act of the speculative intellect, but the «bonum cui intellectus speculativus conjungitur per cognitionem», and this is objective beatitude. The good of the speculative intellect as such is more common because it is formally more abstract, more separated from the singularity of the operable which involves potentiality, and hence more communicable.

1. In IV Sent., d. 49, q. 1, a. 1, qa 3, sol. 3.

His position having been plainly contradicted by the littera Sanctæ Thomæ, here is how Father Eschmann behaves: the embarrassing sentences are confined to a footnote, and in the footnote their meaning is also taken care of:

To understand this and similar texts (one of which is quoted by De K., p. 172, note 13) 1 it must be noted, first, that the notion of common good is an analogical notion which St. Thomas has not always used in the same nor in its proper sense; and, secondly, that the Thomistic discussion of the primacy of the common good is frequently not, in the first place, a discussion of a doctrine, but of an ecclesiology. 2 A dictum authenticum, to a medieval writer, is always true. The only thing, therefore, that can be done about it, is to sustain it and to interpret it. A student of the Thomistic primacy of the common good must first of all know the characteristic medieval techniques of how to deal with a dictum authenticum. —DM, 200-201.

Thrusting into the back of our minds the nightmarish vision of a great doctrine degenerating into interminable historical controversies on the historical use of formulae, we shall turn our attention to Father Eschmann's unusual notion of analogy, with which we already have some acquaintance. When an analogical notion is not being used in its proper sense, in what precise sense is it being used? The good St. Thomas speaks of is surely a good in the strict sense. There could be little doubt on this point. Father Eschmann's Latin, it is true, might allow him to object that beatitudo is a good only «in a certain sense», since he could point out that St. Thomas' clear and precise littera expressè states: «beatitudo est quoddam bonum excedens naturam creaturæ» 2. The very definition of beatitudo («bonum perfectum intellectualis nature») would be destroyed, of course, but further historical research of this kind could always manage to break down even this definition into a mere dictum authenticum.

Is St. Thomas' «bonum communius» really a common good? Not in the proper sense, Father Eschmann might reply. But this means raising a question of sophistry, for the bonum commune of the practical intellect is a common good in the strict sense, whereas the common good of the speculative intellect would be understood in an improper sense, and yet the latter is to be called «more common» than the former. Perhaps this should embarrass no one. When faced with a dictum authenticum, a sophisma equivocationis is doubtless quite in order.

The reader will have noticed that the first proposition of the argumentum in contrarium was: «quod beatitudo magis consistat in actu intellectus practici quam speculativo». This means that, in this phrase, we have to do with formal felicity, which consists in the adeptio finis. The second part of St. Thomas' answer is also concerned with this operation and good: «Sed hoc est verum quod assecutio finis...» The speculative assecutio is proper to the intellect of the individual person. St. Thomas now compares this assecutio singularis to the assecutio of the practical good which is outside the intellect. And this assecutio may be either singularis, or communis as in the one who directs both himself and the multitude toward the good.

1. The text Father Eschmann here disposes of (De Spiritu Sancto, a. 8, ad 5) was quoted above, pp. 24-25.

2. In Ia, q. 5, a. 6, c.

It is called common, not formally because of the community of the good involved (as my Opponent supposes when he defines the common good by the associatio communis) but «inquantum per intellectum practicum aliquis se et alios dirigit in finem», which is quite a different matter.

But these distinctions are of slight importance to Father Eschmann. Just as from the fact that formal beatitude is a proper good he inferred that objective beatitude is also a proper good of the person, so now, from the associatio singularis, that is, from the same formal beatitude, he infers, without troubling to explain how, that the good attained by this associatio cannot be a common good.

On page 203, Father Eschmann again indulges in another historical observation. He is about to quote a text from chapter 13 of St. Thomas' opuscule De Perfectione Vitae spiritualis. Between parentheses he makes the following remark:

(Let us note that this work was written against the pragmatism of Gerald of Abbeville whose main mistake was to have turned the relative primacy of the common good into an absolute one!)

My Opponent's understanding of St. Thomas' words: «ipse solus dirigitur in speculationis finem», is quite obviously opposed to my central position, namely, that the intellectual creature is directed to God as a part to the good of the whole. Now, it is quite remarkable that in the very chapter Father Eschmann refers to, St. Thomas says just that. Speaking of the love of our neighbour, St. Thomas says:

[Dilectio proximi sancta dicitur] ex hoc quod... ordinatur in Deum: sicut enim homines qui sunt unius civitatis consortes in hoc conveniunt, quod uni subduntur principi, cuius legibus gubernantur, ita et omnes homines in quantum naturaliter in beatitudinem tendunt, habent quandam generalem conventionem in ordine ad Deum, sicut ad summum omnium principem et beatitudinis fontem et totius iustitiae legislatorem. Considerandum est autem, quod bonum commune secundum realem rationem est bono proprio preferendum: unde unaqueque pars naturali quodam instinctu orientatur ad bonum totius. Cuius signum est, quod aliquis perussioni manum exponit, autem communitate qua omnes homines in beatitudinis fine conveniunt, unaqueque homo, ut pars eadem consideratur, bonum autem commune totius est ipse Deus, in quo unusquisque seipsum in Deum ordinat sicut pars ordinatur ad bonum totius, quod quidem per claritatem perficitur, qua homo seipsum propter Deum amat. Cum igitur aliquis etiam proximum propter Deum amat, diligit eum sicut seipsum, et per hoc dilectio sancta efficitur. Unde dicitur, I Joan. iv. Hoc mandatum habemus a Deo, ut qui diligit Deum, diligat et fratrem suum.

The position Father Eschmann attacks could not be more clearly stated.

Now for the text my Opponent quotes from this same chapter of the opuscule. Immediately following the parenthesis given above he quotes:

«Proximus autem noster non est universale bonum supra nos existens, sed particulare bonum infra nos constitutum.» Will Professor De K. be able to give us a fitting explanation of this «infra nos» of St. Thomas? I cannot help but think that he will

1. I should like it understood that my remarks on such employment of «history» as this are not to be interpreted as a reflection on authentic historical research like that undertaken even on this continent, and whose quality could not be enhanced by any praise of mine.

not. According to the suppositions of his system he will protest (in fact, he does so, on similar occasions) that this is the abuse abominable of egotism. We have no reason to recede even one iota from the clear and precise filiter Sancti Thomae. That it contains no egotism at all is clear to everyone who, with St. Thomas, knows how to distinguish between amor sui ordinatus and amor sui inordinatus.—D.H. 203.

Does Father Eschmann mean that I hold our neighbour to be «bonum universale supra nos existens», and not «bonum particulare infra nos constitutum»? My Opponent's question recalls such remarkable fineness in dealing with this problem and such scrupulous care in reading my book, that I feel quite speechless. Yet, lest the reader believe I concede Father Eschmann's interpretation of this text (his interpretation is unmistakably clear from his general doctrine and from his purpose in quoting it against me) I should like to add that it represents inescapably that position which I do not hesitate to qualify in those very terms he quotes from my essay.

Why should we love ourselves more than our neighbour? Obviously the reason cannot be that, absolutely speaking, we are better than our neighbour. He who would not be content to be the last to leave purgatory, to be the last in the kingdom of heaven and therefore the least of all the Blessed, would stand small chance of ever getting there. The reason why we must love ourselves more than our neighbour is not that we are better than our neighbour, but because, as St. Thomas says, licet proximus melior sit Deo propinquior, quia tamen non est ita propinquus caritatem habentis sicut ipse sibi, non sequitur quod magis debeatur proximum quam seipsum diligere.¹

It is essential for each one of us to realize in a most practical manner that certainly in any, and possibly every one of our neighbours is better than our own person, and by «better» I mean better in the eyes of God and more lovable to Him. If we cannot love them according to their own, absolute amiability, it is because we cannot love them as God loves them.²

In the same article 4 (I Ia Ia, q. 26) St. Thomas adds something which, according to Father Eschmann, would be in open contradiction with the passage we have just quoted:

Ad tertium dicendum quod, sicut Augustinus dicit, in Regula, quod dicitur, Caritas non querit quae sua sunt, sic intelligitur quia communia propria anteponit. Semper autem commune bonum est magis amabile unicuique quam proprium bonum: sicut etiam ipsi parti est magis amabile bonum totius quam bonum partiale sui ipsius, ut dictum est. (Scil. a.3.)³

1. I Ia Ia, q. 26, a. 4, ad 1.

2. In connection with St. Thomas' doctrine on humility, it might be well to ponder the following words: «... Aliquis absque falsitate potest se credere et providere omnibus inferioribus (Regula S. Benedicti) secundum defectus occultos quos in se recipit, et dona Dei quae in aliis latent. Unde Augustinus dicit, in libro de Trinitate: Existimate aliquos in occulto superiores, quibus estis in manifesto inferiores.—I Ia Ia, q. 161, a. 6, ad 1.

3. «Secundum ea quae pertinent proprie ad propriam personam aliquis plus debet exhibere dilectionis effectum parentibus quam extraneis; nisi forte in quantum in bono aliquis extranei penderet bonum commune, quod non sibi imponere quisque debet; ut cum aliquis seipsum periculo mortis exponit ad salvandum in bello duceum exercitus, vel in civitate principem civitatis, ad aliquid ratione aliquis salus totius communis. Sed secundum ea quae pertinent ad aliquid ratione aliquis adiacenti, utpote in quantum est civis vel miles, plus debet obedire rectori civitatis, vel duci, quam patri».—De Civit., a. 3, ad 15.

Since Father Eschmann expressly maintains that my understanding of the primacy of the common good is something unheard of in «Christian ethics and theology», a something (surprisingly radical and daring), I might quote an opinion of a seventeenth century theologian, perhaps the last of the greater disciples of St. Thomas:

Post Deum autem, unusquisque magis diligit se, quam proximum, debet enim diligere alios, sicut seipsum, unde ipsemet est quasi exemplar primum et diligendissimum, quia se ut participem gloriæ divine, alios ut socios in participando. Ex vi 70 tanquam Christiani Dominum, etiam ut hominem, et Beatissimam Virginem matrem, et quod participat quantum rationem principii communicatis nobis gratiam, et beatitudinem, est enim Christus ut homo caput gloriæ, et Beatissima Virgo mater capitis, et collum per quod derivatur gratia, et ideo magis debemus ipsos diligere, quam nos.

XI. «CIVITAS HOMINI, NON HOMO CIVITATI EXISTIT»

At the very beginning of his article, Father Eschmann quoted (DM, 186) a passage from the Encyclical Divini Redemptoris. The line most relevant to our problem is the following: Civitas homini, non homo Civitati existit. My Opponent's reader is, presumably, to understand that this text implies a negation of the primacy of the common good. The application is apparently so inevitable that Father Eschmann does not feel obliged to inform the reader that I had answered a current objection drawn from this very text.—BC, 67-71. It is surely clear, even from my Opponent's own paper, that I hold God to be the supreme common good. At the same time, quite inexplicably, Father Eschmann will speak as if I held the supreme common good, to which all else must be subordinated, was none other than the common good of mere political society. So again, in the section of his article we are now examining, we find him making this same implication. When, because of an emergency, the contemplative are called upon to share more fully in the active life, why do they obey?—my Opponent asks.

Is it because they have been enjoying the dulcedo contemplationis as parts of the community, and thus, already, in subordination to its interests and laws?—DM, 202.

I do not think that at this stage, it will be necessary to comment upon the above statement. We already know how freely Father Eschmann skips from one order to the other, as if the notion of common good were a univocal one. We have learned that his common good is a strange thing indeed: an efficient cause; an object of the practical intellect; and now, after the admission that there is a respect in which God is «a common good properly speaking», (DM, 196) we learn that the common good «is essentially a bonum utile, the highest bonum utile, but nothing more».—DM, 202. May we be pardoned if we cannot help murmuring like another: «Would it not be desirable that an author who uses traditional notions knew exactly what they mean?»—DM, 189, n. 12.

The main reason why many a personalist has been irked by my essay is that it took him off-guard. Instead of discussing the problem in terms of «person» and «society». I approach it in the fundamental terms of «proper goods» and «common good». Ultimately, person and society are not to be judged by what they are absolutely, but by what is their perfection, i.e. by what is their good; that is the only way in which Aristotle and St. Thomas ever discussed this problem. To look upon the absolute comparison of person and society as the most basic consideration is distinctly modern. It is also distinctly modern to accord absolute priority to the subject and to believe, with Spinoza (who, in this respect, follows in the footsteps of David of Dinant) that «to be absolutely» is «to be good absolutely», i.e. that «ens simpliciter» is «bonum simpliciter». From this identification it follows quite logically: «Per finem, cuius gratia aliquid facimus, appetitum intelligo». Finis cui becomes finis qui. From such a point of view, the problem of person and society quite naturally becomes the question: is the person better than society? instead of: is the proper good of the person better than his common good? When the problem itself has been so distorted, what can be expected in the solution?

The totalitarian solution is that the individual person is ordered and subjected to society. We are inclined, in rejecting this doctrine, to swing to the opposite extreme; but if we prescind from the common good of the

I. «... Sicut ens est quoddam essenziale, et quoddam accidentale; ita et bonum quoddam essenziale, et quoddam accidentale; et eodem modo amittit aliquis bonitatem sicut, esse substantiale et accidentale.—De Verbo, q. 21, a. 1, ad 6. a. Sicut ens multiplicat per substantiam et accidentale, sic bonitas multiplicatur; sed tamen inter utrumque differt. Quia aliquid dicitur ens esse absolute propter suum esse substantiale, sed propter esse accidentale non dicitur esse absolute; unde cum generatio sit in nobis, esse ens accipit esse substantiale, dicitur generari simpliciter; cum vero accipit esse accidentale, dicitur generari secundum quid; et similiter est de corruptione per quam esse amittitur. De homo autem est e converso. Nam secundum substantialem bonitatem dicitur aliquid bonum secundum quid, secundum vero accidentalem dicitur aliquid bonum simpliciter; unde hominem injustum non dicimus bonum simpliciter, sed secundum quid, in quantum est homo; hominem vero iustum dicimus simpliciter bonum. Cujus diversitatis ista est ratio. Nam unumquodque dicitur esse ens in quantum absolute consideratur; bonum vero, ut ex diebus dicitur ad 6. argum., patet, secundum respectum ad alia. In seipso autem aliquid quod sunt extra ipsum, non perficitur nisi mediante bonis accidentibus ad quibus dicitur esse ens; ita superadditis progreditur; unde absolute bonitatem non obtinet nisi secundum quod completum est secundum substantialem essentialibus et accidentalibus principia. Quidquid autem creatura perfectionis habet per unum suum esse simplex; simplex enim eius essentia est ejus sapientia et fortitudo, et omnia hujusmodi, quæ in nobis sunt essentie superaddita. Et ideo ipsa absoluta bonitas in Deo idem est quod ejus essentia; in nobis autem completa vel absoluta in nobis et augetur et immutatur et totaliter auferitur; non autem in Deo; quamvis substantialis bonitas in nobis semper maneat.—Ibid., a. 5, c. 2. Spinoza, Ethica, pars IV, def. VII.—«Per virtutem et potentiam idem intelligo; hoc est (per Prop. I, p. 11), virtus, quatenus ad hominem refertur, est ipsa hominis essentia seu natura, quatenus potestatem habet quædam efficiendi, que per solas ipsius nature leges possunt intelligi.—Ibid., def. VII.—«Causa autem, qua finalis dicitur, nihil est præter ipsam naturam appetitum, quatenus est aliquid rei veluti principium seu causa primaria illius domus, nihil tum sane intelligimus aliud, quam causam fuisse finalem hujus aut illius domus, immo causa appetitum habuit quod homo ex eo, quod vite habitatio, quatenus ut finalis causa consideratur, nihil ædificandi domum. persons which is the final, and therefore first cause of society, we are left with a mere aggregate of individuals. Now, in this formal consideration, each and every one of that group could never be more than an *alter ego*¹, and the group itself could never be more than an aggregate, a mere universa coactione of alter ego's. Hence, in this perspective, the whole question of our relation to the common good and to our particular good becomes a problem entirely different from that over which the battle has raged until now, resolving itself into the simple question: must one love oneself more than one's neighbour? There is not the slightest doubt that we must love ourselves more. Even Aristotle expressly taught this fundamental truth. Indeed, St. Thomas used the Philosopher's doctrine for an objection against the primacy of the common good, which was reproduced by me:

On pourrait, tout en s'appuyant sur le Philosophe (IX Éthic., cc.4 et 8), pousser l'objection: «Les témoignages d'amitié que l'on rend aux autres ne sont que des témoignages d'amitié rendus à soi-même».—A cette objection saint Thomas répond: «que le Philosophe parle ici des témoignages d'amitié rendus à un autre chez qui le bien qui est objet de l'amitié se trouve selon un certain mode particulier: il ne parle pas des témoignages d'amitié rendus à un autre chez qui le bien en question se trouve sous la raison de bien du tout».—BC, 80-81².

To love our neighbour more than ourselves would be contrary to nature, since we are more one with ourselves than with our neighbour³. Nor is there any doubt that for the very same reason we must love ourselves more than any society so considered. Only God, Christ even as man, and Mary who as truly universal sources dispense to us the divine good, can be loved by us more than ourselves.

Throughout my essay I repeatedly called attention to the simplistic confusion of these two problems; in fact, it was written mainly to dissipate the false assumption that the common good is an alien good, that is, either a personal good of our neighbour or the sum total of proper goods. When we state the fundamental problem in terms of person and society, it is quite natural that the subordination of the personal good to the common good

1. I will quote again a passage from the series of articles on The theory of Democracy by M. J. A. and P. ARNOLD: «... The intentions of natural justice are selfish. They do not regard the good of another man as such, but only as a part of the community which must be observed for one's own good. Now just as natural justice and natural love are selfish, so is heroism. Neither leads men to martyrdom. Though natural love is less selfish than heroism, in that it involves some genuine forgetfulness of self, and though natural justice, through its impels men to the generosity of sacrifice, it remains, nevertheless, essentially self-interested as regards the agent always seeks to perfect himself as well as the good of the community».—April, 1942, n. 2, pp. 329-330. As I pointed out in my book (Appendix II, n. 129 ff.), these authors are at least consistent; they have the candour and courage to go the full distance. «... With respect to the common good, it is necessary to reject as false [italics theirs] all the passages in which St. Thomas declares that the common good is supreme in the natural, temporal order; or, if this is not a fair interpretation of all those texts in which St. Thomas says that the common good takes precedence over the individual good because the good of the whole is greater than the good of its parts, then we must at least reject this false interpretation of what St. Thomas seems to say, which has prevailed among his commentators and followers to this day».—Ibid., pp. 336-337.

2. The original was quoted above, p. 40.

3. I/a IIæ, q. 26, a. 4, c.—«... Unitate nature nihil est magis unum quam nos; sed unitate affectus, cuius objectum est bonum, summe bonum debet esse magis nobis unum quam nos».—De Carit., a. 9, ad 7.

should be interpreted as the collectivist and totalitarian subjection of the individual to the mass. But the truth is, as I sought to explain in the third chapter of my essay, that personalism and totalitarianism proceed from the same assumption.—BC, 73-79. When we say, in opposition to the personalists, that the individual person is subordinated to society, we do not mean, as they would have us mean, that the person and his proper good are subordinated to society considered absolutely; that is, to a mere aggregate of proper goods in which no aspect of a real common good is to be seen. We mean that, within a given order, the good of the individual person is subordinated to the common good of the community. If the political community has the right to execute a criminal citizen, it is not formally because it represents a number of persons, but rather *aut bonum commune conservetur*⁴. The condemned man does not become a responsible menace to violence; he is destroyed because he has proved a responsible menace to the common good.

The reader can now see that Father Eschmann does not seem to be aware of the real problem, and therefore can easily impose upon me the ignominious positions which follow from his own misunderstandings. The very opening paragraph of my book was:

La société humaine est faite pour l'homme. Toute doctrine politique qui ignore la nature rationnable de l'homme, qui nie, par conséquent, sa dignité et sa liberté, est viciée à la racine et soumet l'homme à des conditions inhumaines. C'est donc à bon droit qu'on s'insurge contre les doctrines totalitaires au nom de la dignité de l'homme.—BC, 1.

And on the following page I said:

On peut à la fois affirmer la dignité de la personne et être en fort mauvais compagnie. Suffirait-il d'exalter la criminalité du bien commun? Non plus. Les régimes totalitaires saisissent le bien commun comme prétexte pour asservir les personnes de la façon la plus ignoble. Condamnés à l'esclavage où ils menacent de nous soumettre, la servitude des bêtes est libérée. Commettrons-nous la lâcheté de concéder au totalitarisme ce perversissement du bien commun et de sa primauté?

If no more than Father Eschmann's misunderstandings and accusations were at stake, we should have had little to reply; but when he invokes «the clear and precise littera Sancti Thomæ» in support of a doctrine which, as far as we can see, is indistinguishable from the amor sui inordinatus, we must surely consider it a duty to rally to the defence of true Thomistic principles. Let it be added at once that we have no right to assume that Father Eschmann is conscious of all the implications of his position. And that this should be so is the more understandable because of the fact that his viewpoint, even as regards the primary notion of the good, is the modern one. It is not easy to escape erroneous tendencies when they are those of the age in which we actually live. Inlus existens prohibet extraneum.

And now let us return to the Encyclical Divini Redemptoris. Pius XI precisely denounces the totalitarian conception of person and society.

In the very next phrase he adds (and Father Eschmann himself quotes the passage):

*Id tamen non ita intelligendum est, quemadmodum ob suam individualitatem doctrinam Liberales, quos vocant, asseverant; qui quidem communitatem immo moderatis singulorum commodis inservire jubent....*¹

Since my Opponent has so discreetly overlooked my answer to the objection drawn from this text, I will reproduce it in full.

«La cité existe pour l'homme, l'homme n'existe pas pour la cité.»

Pour convertir ce texte en objection contre notre position, il faudrait le traduire: «Le bien commun de la cité existe pour le bien privé de l'homme.» Nous pourrions, alors, citer la suite immédiate de ce même texte: «Ce qui ne veut point dire, comme le comprend le libéralisme individualiste, que la société est subordonnée à l'utilité égoïste de l'individu.»

La cité existe pour l'homme. Cela doit s'entendre de deux manières. Premièrement, la cité, quand nous l'envisageons comme organisation en vue du bien commun, doit être entièrement soumise à ce bien en tant qu'il est commun. Envisagée sous ce rapport, elle n'a d'autre raison d'être que le bien commun. Or, ce bien commun lui-même est pour les membres de la société; non pas pour leur bien privé comme tel; il est pour les membres en tant que bien commun. Et, comme il s'agit d'un bien commun de natures raisonnables, il doit être conforme à la raison, il doit regarder les natures raisonnables en tant qu'elles sont raisonnables. La cité n'est pas, ou ne peut pas être, un 'pour soi' figé et refermé sur soi, opposé comme un singulier à d'autres singuliers; son bien doit être identiquement le bien de ses membres. Si le bien commun était le bien de la cité en tant que celle-ci est, sous un rapport accidentel, une sorte d'individu, il serait du coup bien particulier et proprement étranger aux membres de la société. Il faudrait même accorder à l'organisation ainsi ravie à ses membres, intelligence et volonté. La cité serait alors comme un tyran anonyme qui s'assujettit l'homme. L'homme serait pour la cité. Ce bien ne serait ni commun ni bien de natures raisonnables. L'homme serait soumis à un bien étranger.—Deuxièmement, la cité, comme le bien commun de la cité, est pour l'homme en tant que celui-ci comprend des formalités qui l'ordonnent à des biens communs supérieurs, formalités qui sont, dans l'homme, supérieures à celle qui l'ordonne au bien commun de la cité. Or, l'identité du sujet, de ces diverses formalités peut prêter à confusion. Le bien privé et le bien commun sont l'un et l'autre biens de l'homme. Et pourtant, tout bien de l'homme n'est pas bien de l'homme purement homme. Le bien de l'homme purement homme, d'après le sens que lui accorde saint Thomas dans les textes déjà cités, n'est autre chose que le bien qui lui convient en raison de l'individu. Le bien commun ne peut jamais être subordonné à cet homme purement homme. La formalité 'homme purement homme' ne peut pas être identifiée à la formalité 'citoyen', comme elle ne peut l'être au sujet 'homme'. Dès lors, quand nous disons un bien commun subordonné à l'homme, ce ne peut être qu'en raison d'une formalité qui regarde un bien commun supérieur. Seul le bien commun le plus parfait ne peut être subordonné à l'homme.

De plus, quand nous disons que le bien commun ne peut jamais être considéré comme une pure extension du bien de l'homme dans la ligne de son bien singulier, en sorte que le bien commun ne serait qu'un détour pour rejoindre le bien singulier, nous n'entendons pas par là que le bien singulier est méprisable, qu'il est néant, qu'il ne doit pas être respecté ou qu'il n'est pas en lui-même respectable. Cependant, si le respect plus grand est dû à la personne quand nous envisageons celle-ci dans son ordination au bien commun. Même le bien singulier de la personne est meilleur quand nous le considérons comme ordonné au bien commun de la personne. Du reste, une cité qui ne respecte pas le bien privé ou le bien des familles, agit contrairement au bien commun. De même que l'intelligence dépend du sens bien disposé, ainsi le bien de la cité dépend de l'intégrité de la famille et de ses membres. Et de même que la nature sensible bien soumise à la raison est plus parfaite dans la ligne même de la nature sensible, de même, dans une cité bien ordonnée, le bien singulier de l'individu et le bien commun de la famille doivent être plus parfaitement réalisés et assurés. Cependant, si le bien commun de la cité était subordonné à ces derniers, il ne serait pas leur bien commun et l'homme serait privé de son bien temporel le plus grand; la cité ne serait pas citée. Elle serait comme une intelligence subordonnée au sens et réduite à la condition d'instrument pour le bien privé.—BC 67-71.

The following objection and answer are related to the same problem: «L'homme n'est pas ordonné à la société politique selon tout lui-même et tout ce qui est sien»¹.

On a voulu conclure de ce texte isolé que la société politique est en dernière instance subordonnée à la personne singulière prise comme telle. Et quiconque ose contredire cette grossière inférence; tourné en faveur du personnalisme, se fait traiter de totalitaire. Or, ainsi que nous l'avons vu, il est contraire à la nature même du bien commun d'être, comme tel, subordonné à un singulier, à moins que ce singulier n'ait lui-même raison de bien commun. Saint Thomas veut dire seulement que l'homme n'est pas ordonné à la seule société politique. Il n'est pas selon tout lui-même partie d'une société politique, mais commun de celle-ci n'est qu'un bien commun de la société politique, est ordonné à cette société en tant que citoyen seulement. Bien que l'homme, l'individu, le membre de famille, le citoyen civil, le citoyen ecclésiastique, soient le même sujet, ils sont, normalement différents. Le totalitarisme identifie la formalité homme à la formalité citoyen. Pour nous, au contraire, non seulement ces formalités sont distinctes, mais elles sont subordonnées les unes aux autres selon l'ordre même des biens. Or, c'est l'ordre des biens, causes finales et premières, et non pas l'homme purement homme, qui est principe de l'ordre de ces formalités d'un même sujet. Le personnalisme avance cet ordre des biens; il accorde le plus grand bien à la formalité la plus inférieure de l'homme. Ce que les personnalistes entendent par personne, c'est, en vérité, ce que nous entendons par pur individu, tout matériel et substantiel enfermé en soi, et ils réalisent la nature raisonnable à la nature sensible qui a pour objet le bien privé.

L'homme ne peut pas s'enkyster au seul bien de la société politique; il doit s'ordonner au bien du tout parfaitement universel, auquel tout bien commun inférieur doit être expressément ordonné. Le bien commun de la société politique doit être expressément ordonné à Dieu, tant par le citoyen-chef que par le citoyen-partie, chacun à sa manière. Ce bien commun demandé, lui-même, cette ordination. Sans cette ordination expresse et publique, la société dégénère en Etat figé et refermé sur soi.—BC, 66-67.

XII. THE PRIVATE LAW OF THE HOLY GHOST

There remains one more objection deserving of our attention before we enter upon the final chapter of this article. This argument against our doctrine while hardly formidable in itself, makes a vivid appeal to one's piety and so has its danger for the person who may not have the leisure to examine it thoroughly. For the principle which inspires it Father Eschmann turns to the Canon Chabani:

To use (and extend) the language of an old and venerable papal document of the eleventh century, the so-called Canon Chabani—a document which has played an important role in the medieval canonist and theological discussions of our problem²—it is not the personalist contention that nobody dare resist the Holy Ghost (Act 7:5), person, of Tom, Dick and Harry, but that nobody dare resist the Holy Ghost (Act 7:5).—DM 207.

A much more complete group related to the privacy of a common good...» (DM 201). This article will appear in a forthcoming issue of the Laval theologique et philosophique.

We shall examine the actual words of the document in a moment or two; for the present let us merely note that from it our Opponent draws an argument based on the supremacy of the law of the Holy Ghost as written in the heart of the individual person, over any possible public law.

The whole objection then, turns on the notion of law, and yet reveals a curious failure to grasp what is most fundamental in that notion. Indeed we have only to bring our Opponent to admit that this private law of the Holy Ghost is truly a law to quite destroy his reasoning. For if it be true law, it must have what is essential to any law (meaning simply that without which no law would be a law); and St. Thomas most uncompromisingly tells us that this «nihil est aliud quam quedam rationis ordinatio ad bonum commune, ab eo qui curam communitatis habet, promulgata»¹. If the private law of the Holy Ghost is a law, then, like any other law, it is a rationis ordinatio ad bonum commune.

Since any law «proprie, primo et principaliter respicit ordinem ad bonum commune»² my Opponent could hardly have chosen a better example to defeat his own position. How untenable his position is might be best shown by reference to the second article of Ia IIæ, q. 90, which answers the question: Utrum lex ordinatur semper ad bonum commune. The whole article places us right in the middle of our problem. If anyone entertained the slightest doubt as to the strict meaning of the bonum commune which is the end of the law, he may read in the reply to the second objection that St. Thomas means «bonum commune, non quidem communitate generis vel speciei, sed communitate causæ finalis, secundum quod bonum commune dicitur finis communis». Here is the body of the article:

Respondeo dicendum quod... lex pertinet ad id quod est principium humanorum actuum, ex eo quod est regula et mensura. Sicut autem ratio est principium humanorum actuum, ita etiam in ipsa ratione est aliquid quod est principium respectu omnium aliorum. Unde ad hoc oportet quod principaliter et maxime pertineat lex. Primum autem principium in operativis, quorum est ratio practica, est finis ultimus. Est autem ultimus finis humanæ vitæ felicitas vel beatitudo, ut supra habitum est. Unde oportet quod lex maxime respiciat ordinem qui est in beatitudine. Rursus, cum omnis pars ordinatur ad totum sicut imperfectum ad perfectum, unus autem homo est pars communis. Unde et Philosophus, in præmissa definitione legalium, mentionem facit et de felicitate et communitate politica. Dicit enim, in V Ethic., quod legalia iusta dicimus factiva et conservativa felicitatis et particularium ipsius, politica communicatione. perfecta enim communitas civitas est, ut dicitur in I Polit.

In quolibet autem genere id quod maxime dicitur, est principium aliorum, et alia dicuntur secundum ordinem ad ipsum: sicut ignis, qui est maxime calidus, est causa caliditatis in corporibus mixtis, quæ tantum dicuntur calida, inquantum participant de igne. Unde oportet quod, cum lex maxime dicatur secundum ordinem ad bonum commune, quatenusque aliud præceptum de particulari opere non habeat rationem legis nisi secundum ordinem ad bonum commune. Et ideo omnis lex ad bonum commune ordinatur.

To the central doctrine conveyed in these words we may add the main divisions of law laid down by St. Thomas in this same treatise, before proceeding to the actual document which our Adversary has invoked.

1. Ia IIæ, q. 90, a. 4, c.
2. Ibid., a. 3, c.

By the eternal law St. Thomas means «ipsa ratio gubernationis rerum in Deo sicut in principe universalitatis existens»,¹ and the end of this divine government is «ipse Deus, nec ejus lex est aliud ab ipso»². The natural law is a «participatio legis æternæ in rationali creatura»³. Now, since the precepts of natural law are very general—e.g. conmitte no evil, whereas the action is in the singular, human reason must derive more particular directives from these naturally known principles, either by way of conclusion—e.g. one must not kill, or by way of further determination, e.g. life imprisonment for murder. Such conclusions or determinations constitute human law⁴. But because man is ordained to a supernatural end, «ideo superadditur lex divinitus data, per quam lex æterna participatur alio modo»⁵. Finally, when a human law is contrary to human good, it does not bind in conscience, «nisi forte propter vitandum scandalum vel turbationem, propter quod etiam homo juri suo debet cedere...»⁶; when opposed to the divine good, however, «nullo modo licet observare: quia sicut dicitur Act. V, obedire oportet Deo magis quam hominibus»⁷.

Now, what does the Canon Urvani mean by the private law of the Holy Ghost? Let us look into the text as Father Eschmann himself quotes it:⁸

Due sunt, inquit (i.e. Urbanus Papa) leges: una publica, altera privata. Publica lex est, que a sanctis Patribus scripta est confirmata, ut lex est canonum, que quidem propter transgressiones est tradita. Verbi gratia: Decretum est in canonibus, clericum non debere de suo episcopatu ad alium transire sine commendatitiiis litteris sui episcopi, quod propter criminosos constitutum est, ne videlicet infames ab aliquo episcopo suscipiantur persone. Solebant enim officia sua, cum non in suo episcopatu poterant, in alio celebrare, quod iure preceptis et scriptis detestatum est. 1. Lex vero privata est, que instinctu S. Spiritus in corde scribitur, sicut de quibusdam dicit Apostolus: «Qui habent legem Dei scriptam in cordibus suis,» et alibi: «Cum genes legem non habeant, si naturaliter ea, que legis sunt, faciunt, ipsi sibi sunt lex.» «Si quis hominum in ecclesia sua sub episcopio populum retinet, et seculariter unum, si affatus Spiritu sancto in aliquo monasterio vel regulari canonica salvare se (Variante: salvari se) voluerit, quia (Variante: qui enim) lege privata ducitur, nulla ratio exigit, ut a publica lege constringatur. Dignior est enim lex privata quam publica. Spiritus quidem Dei lex est, et qui Spiritu Dei agitur lege Dei ducuntur; et quis est, qui possit sancto Spiritui digne resistere? Quisquis igitur hoc Spiritu ducitur, etiam episcopo suo contradicente, eat liber nostra auctoritate. Iusto enim lex non est posita, sed ubi Spiritus Dei, ibi libertas, et si Spiritu Dei ducimini, non estis sub lege.»

If this text is to furnish an argument against the primacy of the common good, it can only be on condition public law is taken to mean a law which is ordained to the common good, whereas the private law of the Holy

4. Ia IIæ, q. 91, a. 3; q. 95, a. 2.—It should be noted however, that the conclusions «habent etiam aliquid vigoris ex lege naturali», whereas the mere determinations «ex sola lege humana vigoris habent».—Ibid., q. 95, a. 2, c. The reader will observe that the instance of a lex publica (which is of course a human law) given by the Canon Urvani belongs to the latter kind of human law.

Ghost would be that ordained to the private good. Such an interpretation seems inconceivable and yet if it be not that which my Opponent intends, what possible alternative can he find? Father Eschmann seems to have discovered an entirely new kind of law—a law which is neither eternal, nor natural, nor human, nor divine, nor even law in any strict sense of the word; it is an entity resembling, perhaps, his quoddam bonum commune.

St. Thomas, like Pope Urban himself, has a quite different understanding of the distinction between public law and the private law of the Holy Ghost. In article 5 (Utrum omnes subiacentur legi), q. 96, he formulates the following objection:

2. Præterea, Urbanus Papa dicit, et habetur in Decretis, XIX, quæ: Qui legi privatae dicitur, nulla ratio exigat ut publica constringatur. Lege autem privata Spiritus Sancti ducuntur omnes viri spirituales, qui sunt filii Dei; secundum illud Rom. VIII: Qui Spiritus Dei inhabitat, in filiis Dei sunt. Ergo non omnes homines legi humane subiacentur.

His reply is:

Ad secundum dicendum quod lex Spiritus Sancti est superior omni lege humanis posita. Et ideo viri spirituales, secundum hoc quod lege Spiritus Sancti ducuntur, non subduntur legi, quantum ad ea que reperiuntur dictioni Spiritus Sancti. Sed tamen hoc ipsum est de ductu Spiritus Sancti, quod homines spirituales legibus humanis subdantur; secundum illud I Pet. II: Subjecti estote omni humane creature, propter Deum.

In formulating this objection, Father Eschmann seems to have been under the impression that my obsession with the common good was such as to lead me to teach that the person, in his subjection to an inferior good, may obey a law which is opposed to the divine good. It is this which compels me to recall a rather lengthy paragraph from my essay:

On pourrait encore objecter que si la dignité de la créature raisonnable est liée à sa subordination à Dieu d'où la personne tient tout ce qu'elle est, sa dignité n'est pas liée à sa subordination à d'autres fins si supérieures soient-elles. Dès lors, c'est dans les choses créées. En effet, «quand le bien propre d'un être est subordonné à plusieurs biens supérieurs, l'agent doué de volonté est libre de sortir de l'ordre qui se rattache à l'un de ces êtres supérieurs et de rester dans l'ordre qui se termine à un autre, que ce dernier soit plus ou moins élevé»¹.—A cela nous répondons que quand un agent doué de volonté doit subordonner son bien propre à un bien créé supérieur, ce ne peut être qu'en tant que celui-ci est lui-même conforme à l'ordre divin. Dès lors, quand l'inférieur doit se soustraire à ce qui lui est supérieur, c'est que ce supérieur s'est écarté de l'ordre où il devait lui-même se tenir. Mais, tant que ce supérieur se tient dans l'ordre, il est un bien supérieur auquel l'inférieur doit se soumettre. Par exemple, le soldat qui est soumis à ce qui lui est supérieur, l'armée peut subordonner sa volonté au bien du général et non à celui du roi, et inversement; mais dans le cas où le général transgresserait l'ordre donné par le roi, la volonté du soldat serait bonne, s'il l'exécutait de la volonté du général pour la soumettre au roi; elle serait mauvaise s'il exécutait la volonté du général contrairement à la volonté du roi; car l'ordre d'un prince inférieur dépend de l'ordre du prince supérieur². Toutefois, «il y aurait

2. «Sicut miles, qui ordinatur sub regis et sub duce exercitus, potest voluntatem suam ordinare in bonum ducis et non regis, aut e converso. Sed si dux ab ordine regis recedat, bona erit voluntas militis recedentis ad voluntatem ducis et dirigentis voluntatem suam in regem, mala autem voluntas militis sequentis voluntatem ducis contra regis: ordo enim inferioris principii dependet ab ordine superioris».—Ibid.

XIII. «.....THE TERM 'PERSONALISM' (IN ITSELF, NO DOUBT, A BAD ONE).....»

Some people call themselves personalists but, when one brings to their attention what that term usually emphasizes, they will hasten to add that they do not mean it in such a sense. In their special acceptance of it, the term may represent nothing objectionable, but it is doubtful if that be enough to justify its common use. In a certain class of Catholic writers there has appeared a tendency to effect something like a theft of the adversary's thunder by using his own vocabulary in applications which, in the end, turn out to be quite different from the impositions given them in the original¹. The result is, of course, an ambiguity sufficient to mislead the most well-intentioned of readers.

That the tendency I mention is a pernicious one, may be convincingly demonstrated by the case of personalism. The writers who represent this theory reach an audience that is both large and important in the world of Catholic education. Whether or not their books are being correctly interpreted by this circle of readers is not the question which concerns us at the moment; the point is that a considerable number of people holding responsible posts in our institutions of higher learning are clearly taking the personalism expounded in such works to imply the negation of the primacy of the common good. In giving approval to an article like that of Father Eschmann, not only do they, quite unconsciously, welcome the central thesis of personalism in its most abject form, but they also prove the dangerous fruitfulness of ambiguity.

1. Thus we have our own doctrinal «Humanism», «Liberalism», «Naturalism» and even «Catholic Communism» has been suggested. Father Eschmann himself states that the term «personalism» is, in itself, no doubt, a bad one; that it must be «purged of the connotations through its sources in modern philosophy»; and ZM, 208. On this subject, Cardinal Villeneuve says, in the Preface to BC, «Des esprits très «Présentement, c'est le personnelisme qui est devenu à la mode. Des esprits très sincères le préconisent. On écrit pour un ordre personaliste, on travaille à ce respect de la personne, on s'écrit pour l'homme... Tout cela est très bien, tout. Elle a Dieu pour fin, et à vouloir enlever des meilleurs des adjectifs (il est-on ne s'agit pas de parler du matérialisme d'Aristote et de saint Thomas) pour désigner leur doctrine naturelle?», même on n'exclut pas les sous-entendus pensés naturaliste, athée, on laisse sous-entendre aussi la pensée des autres, amiste, et on favorise le retour ne fut-ce que par son indifférence, radicalement humaine et avec le langage la philosophie de la théologie. C'est contre quoi l'auteur s'élève. Il n'a pas tort. Il est temps plus que jamais, en effet, de créer, dans l'ordre, un langage qui ne soit pas organisé pas en fonction de la personne individuelle, mais en fonction du bien commun, à ses divers degrés, c'est-à-dire, de la fin souveraine, c'est-à-dire en fonction de Dieu.

«L'auteur s'attaque ouvertement aux personalistes, mais pour défendre vraiment la dignité de la personne humaine. Son étude insiste sur la grandeur de la personne sans flatter les personnes. Elle s'oppose à toute doctrine qui, sous prétexte de la glorifier, diminue et atrophie la personne humaine et la prive de ses biens les plus divins».

Had we read and obeyed the littera Sancti Thomæ we would have been spared this disastrous and widespread condition:

... Cum infidelibus nec nomina debemus habere communia, ne ex consortio nominum possit sumi erroris occasio; nomine facti non est a fidelibus utendum, ne videamur illis assentire qui male de facto senserunt, omnia necessitati siderum subijcientes. Utique Augustinus dicit, in V de Civitate Dei: Si quis voluntatem vel potestatem Dei facti nomine appellat, sententiam tenent, linguam corrigat. Et Gregorius, secunquam eundem intellectum, dicit: *Absti a fidelium membris ut factum aliquando esse dicant*¹.

... Sicut Hieronymus dicit, ex verbis inordinatae prolati incurritur hæresis. Unde cum hæreticis nec nomina debemus habere communia: ne eorum errori favere videamur.²

He who rightly believes that every human being is a person capable of, and immediately ordained to the supreme immutable common good and that in this consists his dignity, let him not assume that he must therefore call himself a personalist—sententiam teneat, linguam corrigat. Equivocation implies a grave risk and no matter how unwittingly one may have employed it, an inescapable duty may ensue. The following passage from a sermon of St. Thomas may be read in this connection:

Inveniuntur aliqui qui student in philosophia, et dicunt aliqua quæ non sunt vera secundum fidem; et cum dicuntur eis quod hoc repugnat fidei, dicunt quod philosophus dicit hoc, sed ipse non assentit, in eo solum recitans verba philosophi. Talis est falsus propheta, sive falsus doctor, quia idem est dubitationem movere et eam non solvere quod eam concedere; quod signatur in Ezod. (xxi, 33), ubi dicitur quod si aliquis foderit puteum, et aperuerit cisternam et non cooperuerit eam, veniat bos vicini sui, et cadat in cisternam, et aperuerit cisternam tenetur ad ejus restitutionem. Ille cisternam aperit, qui dubitationem movet de his que faciunt ad fidem. Cisternam non cooperit, qui dubitationem non solvit, etsi ipse habeat intellectum sanum et limpium, et non decipatur. Aliter tamen qui intellectum non habet, ita limpium bene decipitur, et ille qui dubitationem movit tenetur ad restitutionem, quia per eum ille cecidit in foveam³.

May I also remind the reader that the personalist conception of marriage⁴ has been condemned by the Suprema Sacra Congregatio S. Officii, in a decree published at the order of Pius XII, on April 1, 1944⁵.

4. On the personalist conception of marriage, Cardinal Villeneuve has this to say: «Ce n'est donc pas dans une conception personaliste du mariage, ni dans un soi-disant lativisme et éthiques à l'erreur, qui résultent l'une et l'autre de conceptions spéculatives et éthiques à l'erreur, qu'on pourra trouver la solution aux problèmes soulevés de plus en plus tragiquement par les déviations de la vérité. C'est toujours la vérité qui doit nous délivrer. Or, ces conceptions ne visent qu'à pousser jusqu'à l'exaspération la périlleuse solitude où se trouvent la personne, une fois qu'on la détache et qu'on l'isole, sous prétexte de l'exaltinge à son appui naturel, le bien commun».—BC, xviii. Referring to H. Doms' success in son Dieu, and Zweck der Ehe (Du sens et de la fin du mariage), Desclée De Brouwer, Paris, 1937; The Meaning of Marriage, Sheed and Ward, New York 1939). I ventured the unpopular opinion that it presents a «deeply perverse conception of marriage».—BC, 181, n.38.

5. «De matrimoni finibus eorumque relatione et ordine his postremis annis nonnulla typis edita prodierunt, quæ vel asserrunt finem primarium matrimonii non sed ab eo independentem, vel fines secundarios non esse finem primario subordinatos.

Hæc in elucubrationibus primarius conjugii finis alius ab aliis designatur, ut ex. gr.: conjugum per omnimodam vitæ actionisque communione complementum

I should like it understood that I do not at all accuse Father Eschmann of using the term «personalism» ambiguously. On the contrary, he employs it in its strict meaning, as may be clear from his fundamental position:

Objectively, i.e. viewed from the part of its uncreated object, the vision is not a common good; it is not even God as Common Good (to speak of common good in a proper and adequate language) but it is God Himself, the Bonum universale in essendo, as has been shown above.—DM, 202.

Nor could he have ever attacked my essay had I not been clear about what I mean by personalism and what I have against it.

XIV. THE DEVIL AND THE COMMON GOOD

The rather flamboyant title of this final chapter might suggest that it is to contain doctrine of a novel and startling kind; its aim, however, is exactly the contrary. The fitting and proper close for any discussion in Christian Theology will always be an appeal to traditional and ancient teaching, and it is this indispensable support which we propose to seek in our last pages. If, prescinding now from the explicit littera Sancti Thomæ, there were any truth in the accusation, that the primacy of the divine common good is a modern innovation, then for that reason alone he who held it should feel uneasy. But we shall leave it to the reader to judge, after reading the testimony now to be described, whether or not our position draws its strength from the roots of tradition.

In a paragraph of my book which arouses Father Eschmann's amusement as recalling «by its style and bearing the 'heroic' ages of baroque-Scholastic controversy» (DM, 184), I refer to John of St. Thomas in support of my position. The note to this passage presented in full the actual words of this recognized theologian. This citation will receive fuller notice in a moment, but for the present let it be noted that the text of John of St. Thomas (1589-1644) is based in turn directly on the authority of St. Augustine (354-430—«a superiore communi omnium beatifico bono [mali angeli] ad propria defluerunt»); and also on the authority of Pope St. Gregory (c.540-604—«.....Dum [Leviathan] privatam celsitudinem superbe appetit, jure perdidit participatam»¹); and again on the authority ac personalis perfectio; conjugum mutus amor atque unio fovenda ac perficienda per psychicam et somaticam proprie personæ traditionem; et hujusmodi alia plura.

Proposito sibi dubio: «An admitti possit quorundam recentiorum sententia, qui vel negant finem primarium matrimonii esse proles generationem et educationem, vel decem fines secundarios finem primario non esse essentialiter subordinatos, sed esse æque principales et independentes»; respondendum decreverunt: «Negative».—Acta Apost. Sedis, 20 Aprilis 1944, NCWC., August 20, 1944, p.103.

Nor is the following passage from the Acta Tribunalium of the Sacra Romana Rota to be overlooked: «Recentissimis his nostris temporibus auctores quidam, de finibus matrimonii disserentes, hoc emutuum adiutorium» alio modo explicant, inquantum sed. esse personalem conjugum auxilium et complementum accipit. atque continentem, non secundarium sed primarium finem matrimonii esse hæc «personæ» conjugum evolutionem atque perfectionem, quam tamen non omnes eodem, sed alii sub alto respectu considerant atque urgent. Hi novatores in re matrimoniali a vera eademque doctrina recedunt, quin solida et probata argumenta pro suis opinionibus afferre valeant».—Acta Apost. Sedis, 26 Junii 1944; NCWC., October 20, 1944, p.168.

of St. Bernard (1090-1153)—«(Homines) infirmiores sunt, inquit (diabolus), inferioresque natura, non decet esse concives, nec aequales in gloria»¹; on the authority of St. Thomas (1224/5-1274)—«affectavit [diabolus] excellentiam singularem»². The innovator Father Eschmann denounces was born in 1906.

The extraordinary thing is that all these mighty witnesses are as one in recognizing the denial of the Common Good as being the peculiar crime of Satan. Yet it is understandable that this be so, for the temptation could be for none more alluring than for persons as glorious as Lucifer and his followers before their fall. John of St. Thomas explains this in the passage I quoted.

... Quia videntes dignitatem suam, appetierunt singularitatem, quæ maxime est propria superiorum. (...) (recusat diabolus beatitudinem supernaturalem) habere sine singularitate propria, sed communem cum hominibus; ex quo consecutum est quod voluerit specialiter super eos habere prelationem potius quam communicationem. ut etiam Divus Thomas factum in hac questione LXIII, a.3, in calce. Accedit ad hoc auctoritas S. Gregorii pape, ... «Angelos perdidisse participatam beatitudinem, quia privatam desideraverunt», id est, recesserunt celestem beatitudinem, quia participatam, et communis erat multas, et solum voluerunt privatam, scilicet quantenus superbia; scilicet singularitatem, seu nihil commune habere cum inferioribus, quod ipsis vulgare videbatur, etiam si esset gloria supernaturalis, et non habere illam ex speciali beneficio, et gratia, et quasi precario: hoc enim maxime recusat superior, et maxime recusat angelus. Et ad hoc pertinet parabola illa Luce XIV, de homine qui fecit cenam magnam, et vocavit multos, et cum vocasset invitatos ceperunt se excusare; iteo enim fortassis recesserunt ad illam cenam venire, quia magna erat, et pro multis, designantes consortium habere cum tanto numero, potiusque eligunt suas privatas commoditates, licet longe inferiores, utpote naturalis ordinis, iste qui villam emit, ille qui iuga boum, alius qui uxorem duxerat, unusquisque propriam excusationem pretendens, et privatam bonum, quia proprium, recusans vero cenam, quia magnam, et multis communem. Iste est propriissime spiritus superbiæ.³

Could one state more clearly that the fallen Angels refused supernatural beatitude because it can be achieved only as a common good and because they had to seek it qua common good? Yet, by their faith and their most perfect natural knowledge the Angels, who cannot err in matters of speculative science, knew, incomparably better than we, that the adaptio finis is an assecutio singularis. They knew that God Himself and God alone is the primary object of this happiness and that the vision is in no way interrupted by the existence of any neighbour nor by any number of them. Yet they prefer that lower good which is possessed as a privilege of their angelic nature or as wholly personal, to a good common to many and dispensed according to the free choice of God Himself Who can make the last first and the first last.⁴ They may be compared to those who refused to attend the great supper, simply because it was a great one to which many were invited, and they scorned to take part with such a crowd. They preferred, accordingly, to turn to private affairs, even though these were far inferior and of a quite earthly nature. Nothing could be more characteristic of the proud. The Angels well knew the object of heavenly beatitude is the proper good of God alone which to angel or man can be only a common good. And in desiring to confine themselves to their personal good, we may think of them as pleading with great show of argument that, in so doing, they were only striving generously to be like to God in a more unique and personal fashion, since in this they would be less dependent upon His grace and favour, possessing their good by way of a strictly personal appropriation¹. In other words, they sought to be assimilated to God only with regard to this that God is good, thus aiming to be most like to Him by being good in themselves, instead of seeking the assimilation to Him by being good in an object which is common and impossible to attain as a proper good. And so, as St. Augustine (354-430) says, from that higher and beatific good which was common to all, they lapsed to this private good of their own:

Angelorum honorum et malorum inter se contrarios appetitus non naturis primisque diversis, cum Deus omnium substantiarum bonus auctor et conditor utroque creaverit; sed voluntatibus et cupiditatibus existitisse, debilitare fas non est; dum alii constanter in communi amicitia bono, quod ipse illic Deus est, atque in eius aternitate, veritate, claritate persistunt; alii, sua potestate potius delectati, velut bonum suum sibi ipsi essent, a superiore communi omnium laudifica bono ad propria delinunt, et habentes elationis fastium pro excelbissimum aternitate, vanitatis astutiam, pro certissima veritate, studia partium pro individuali elatione, superbi, fallaces, invidi effecti sunt.²

That, I believe, was authentic personalism in high places. Yet, it is quite different from contemporary doctrine. Before explaining what we mean let us quote from the second page of Father Eschmann's article:

This is the personalism which is at issue in a passage on page three of Professor De Koninck's book, a passage which recalls by its style and bearing the characteristics of baroque-Scholastic controversy:

Le péché des anges fut une erreur pratiquement personaliste: ils ont préféré la dignité de leur propre personne à la dignité qui leur serait venue dans la subordination à un bien supérieur mais commun dans sa supériorité même.

1. «... Nec enim nos dicimus peccatum superbiæ in Angelo processisse ex iudicio intendente consecutumque beatitudinis sine gratia, seu ex viribus propriis: nihil enim consecutum non potest esse intentum sine errore, sed orta fuit ex iudicio recusatam beatitudinem etiam gloriam ex gratia, et beneficio alieno, et sine singularitate alioquin ad communicandum cum inferioribus: hoc enim maxime designantur in scripturis, et non ut debitorum, etiam gloriam ipsam recusant: unde aliquid in gratia, in beneficio, et non esset ex gratia, et omnem modum habendi aliquid in gratia, in beneficio, in argumento voluerunt positive, et formaliter beatitudinis, sed efficaciter voluerunt illam recusare, quia erat ex gratia, et communicabilis omnibus, virtualiter autem volebant illam, si sic non esset: efficaciter vero, et restrictive adhaerebant propriis excellentiæ ut fini, quia ibi tales conditiones non inveniebant, sed erat propria, non communis, et non ex gratia specialit, sed solum iure creationis convenientis».—JOHN OF ST. THOMAS, Ibid., pp.953-954.

2. De Civitate Dei, XII, c.1.

L'hésité pélagienne, dit Jean de Saint Thomas, peut être considérée comme une étiologie de ce péché de anges. Elle n'en est qu'une étiologie, car, alors que l'erreur des anges fut purement pratique, l'erreur des pélagiens était en même temps spéculative. Nous croyons que le personnelisme moderne n'est qu'une réflexion de cette étiologie, spéculativement encore plus faible. Il érige en doctrine spéculative une erreur qui fut à l'origine seulement pratique.

Nous n'entendons pas soutenir ici que l'erreur de tous ceux qui se disent aujourd'hui personnelistes est plus que spéculative. Qu'il n'y ait là-dessus aucune ambiguïté. Sans doute notre insistance pourra-t-elle blesser ceux des personnelistes qui ont identifié cette doctrine à leur personne. C'est là leur responsabilité très personnelle. Mais il y a aussi la nôtre—nous jugeons cette doctrine pernicieuse à l'extrême.—DM, 184.

The squib: «How many Angels can dance on a pin-point?» has been, perhaps, not without its effect even on learned Catholic circles. It is considered in bad taste to even mention the pure spirits—except, of course, in «objective» Historical Point of View research. In fact, we are led to wonder why God bothered to tell us of them, and why He has repeatedly warned us against those that move in the darkness. Yet, He seems to be of the opinion that Angel and Devil play a rather prominent role in His universe and concern us more than the Evil One would like us to believe. And is it not He who tells us: invidia autem diaboli mors intravit in orbem terrarum: imitantur autem illum qui sunt ex parte illius?¹ Christ Himself has said: Vos ex patre diabolo estis: et desideria patris vestri nullas facere. Ille homicida erat ab initio, et in veritate non stetit.² We are warned that Satan will seduce the nations,³ and in daily evening prayers the Church repeats the words of St. Peter: Sobrii estote et vigilate: quia adversarius vester diabolus tamquam leo rugiens circum, quaerens quem devoret.⁴ The invidious personalism of the Devil is our concern, and on highest authority we must fear him and pay no heed to those who smile at our solicitude.

Now, in the first sentence of the citation which recalled to my Opponent, (by its style and bearing the 'heroic' ages of baroque-Scholastic controversy),⁵ it is stated that the Angels could commit no speculative error—even Adam shared in this privilege.⁶ The Angels knew, therefore, that divine beatitude could not possibly become their proper good. Their error could only have consisted in ignorantia electionis, a purely practical error. «The sin of the Angels was a practical personalist error: they preferred the dignity of their own person to that dignity which would come to them through their subordination to a good, higher but common in its very sovereignty».—BC, 3.

5. I readily admit that of all those who dare go into print, I have possibly the least skill as a writer. However, I cannot allow my shortcomings to prevent me from taking up so great a cause. For, as has been well said: If a thing is worth doing at all it is worth doing ill.

6. «Adam non est seductus, sed malier. Seductio autem duplex est, sc. in universalis, et in particulari eligibili. Quis est ignorantia electionis. Quicumque ergo peccat, seducitur ignorantia eligibili. Quis est ignorantia particulari eligibili. Malier autem fuit seductus, ignorantia in universalis quando se contulit ad serpentem dixit, sed vir non creditur hoc, sed deceptus fuit in particulari. Sed vir, gerens esse pro uxore, et cum ea comedere deberet, et inexpertus divine sovcratias creditur quod facile et remitteretur. —In I ad Tim., c.2, lect.3.

The Pelagians on the other hand, were guilty of simple speculative error when they taught that, absolutely speaking, the natural powers were adequate to achieve the supernatural end of man. To maintain that the Angels could entertain such crass speculative ignorance would be to ignore the power of their intelligence.

Nec oportet [diabolo] attribueri errorem Pelagii de habendo merita condigna ex propria natura, quia ipsi non volebant consequi formaliter, et de facto gloriam per sua naturalia, sed recusabant habere illam, si per gratiam consequenda erat, ut vere erat. Unde non habuerunt errorem speculativam Pelagii, sed habuerunt maximum superbiam, unde erupit scintilla erroris Pelagii.

Now the personalism I attack shows an even greater speculative debility than that of Pelagianism, since it mistakes not just the means of attaining supernatural beatitude, but bears directly on the nature of God Himself. It is deserving of more indulgence only because it is more stupid.²

That is what was meant by the first paragraph Father Eschmann quotes. The continuation of it is possibly even more «baroque-Scholastic» in style:

L'asservissement de la personne au nom du bien commun est comme une vengeance diabolique à la fois remarquable et cruelle, une attaque sournoise contre la communauté du bien à laquelle le démon avait refusé de se soumettre. La négation de la dignité supérieure que l'homme reçoit dans la subordination de son bien tout personnel au bien commun assurerait la négation de toute dignité humaine.—BC, 3-4.

And by the negation of all human dignity we mean the fruits of personalism. Quite logically the inordinate exaltation of the human person has a principle and term in contempt of the other person.

Ce refus de la primauté du bien commun procède, au fond, de la triéfiance et du mépris des personnes.—BC, 19.

2. My Adversary says he would never have come out with this judgment, had not Father Baisnée written his article.—DM, 187, n.3. His reference is to Father Jules A. Baisnée's Two Catholic Critiques of Personalism, which appears in The Modern Schoolman, Jan., 1945, XXII, 59-75. On page 185, Father Eschmann writes: «Father Baisnée reveals himself to be much impressed by the claims of the authorities which, according to him, Professor De Koninck's anti-personalist constitution commands». Father Baisnée had said: «Cardinal Villeneuve, Archbishop of Quebec, added the weight of his authority to this condemnation of the new theory in which he saw a real danger of revival of Pelagianism. [1971, cit., 50.] There is there lurking in the movement of Personalism an opposite [of Totalitarianism] but equally serious danger of fostering by loose thinking which goes to evil and find good» what Cardinal Villeneuve does not hesitate to call «a revival of the cephalus monster of Pelagianism?»—Ibid., 74; BC, XXII. On the same page 186, Father Eschmann exclaims: «Pecem, amice!» Would it not be better for us to stop short on the road of censuring and adding-up authorities, before it is too late and Cardinal Villeneuve's scholarship is once more made a laughing stock? As many will remember, Cardinal Villeneuve presented my paper on the common good at the annual meeting of the Académie canadienne saint Thomas d'Aquin, it was never the annual meaning of the Académie canadienne saint Thomas d'Aquin, it was only the dignity of the person and the function of society, His Eminence had never said more nor less than what is repeated in the preface.

To grasp this we have only to recall what has been said already regarding the dual aspect, relative and absolute, in which we can consider the amiability of our neighbour. The created persons are amiable to God in the measure of the goodness He gratuitously bestows upon them. We, however, cannot love them according to their nearness to Him, but only according to their nearness to us. On the other hand, any created good, including ourselves, pales to nonentity before the divine good which in beatitude becomes our good—our common good. But to rejoice in the fact that our neighbour is only a particular good (infra nos constitutum) may be a rather doubtful attitude. Emphasis on the nos is definitely jeopardizing. Our Lord was rather insistent that some would be first and some last and what He said concerned beatitude. That is one point of view not to be ignored. In the end, His point of view must prevail. However, when our point of view (that of our neighbour's nearness to us) prevails over the former, then, of course, any common good, as well as any particular good except ourselves, becomes a mere bonum utile—i.e. a good only as a means, for the sake of that good which is our insatiable ego.

That the Devil exists, that he is envious of man, that he is a homicidal, that in envy and revenge he craves our imitation of his initial deed, is uncreated truth. This may be called «baroque», yet it is truth divine. It is, absolutely speaking, more true than our own existence.

Such being the gravity of the error we attacked, the reader will understand why we were careful to add that in no way did we consider «the error of all those who call themselves personalists to be more than speculative. Let there be no ambiguity about that». For a man is good, not because of his science, but because of the rectitude of his appetite. Yet, we could hardly fail to disturb those personalists who have identified this speculative doctrine with their own person. And if personalism implied what we were certain it did imply (even before Father Eschmann made it rather explicit), the obligation was upon us to say just what that implication was. It would have been quite merciless not to say it.

And now let us turn to one more of my Opponent's statements. Immediately following the above quotation he proceeds:

There is a proper and profound Thomistic doctrine of the relative superiority, within definite orders, of their respective common goods over the particular goods contained in those orders. It is this doctrine which, Professor De Koninck has distorted into the contradictory and unintelligible position of the absolute superiority of «the» common good over all and everything. This will be shown later in detail.—DM, 184-185.

We believe our Opponent had a fair chance to show that our position is «contradictory and unintelligible». Yet, having carefully read his article to the end, if we accepted his conclusion it could only be on his word. We must, however, appreciate his predicament, for, when a dictum authenticum is also a per se notum quoad sapientes,¹ its rejection gives rise to endless difficulties.

¹ «Ainsi, veut-on détruire une proposition per se nota résultant de la seule notification, qu'il bien commun».—BC, 71.

Father Eschmann's denunciation calls to our mind an aptly phrased indictment by that exuberantly affectionate uncle Serretape:

The whole philosophy of Hell rests on recognition of the axiom that one thing is not another thing, and, especially, that one self is not another self. My good is my good and your good is yours....

Now the Enemy's philosophy is nothing more nor less than one continued attempt to evade this very obvious truth. He aims at a contradiction. Things are to be many, yet somehow also one. The good of one self is to be the good of another. This impossibility He calls love, and this same inordinately panacea can be detected under all He does and even all He is—or claims to be.

* * *

The article I have written, long and difficult as it is, will doubtless tax the patience and energies of many of its readers. It has been composed with a threefold purpose: to vindicate the truth, to vindicate St. Thomas, and to utter a word in defence of the personage who so kindly wrote the preface of the little book which has been the occasion of so much controversy. While I hope my work will reveal a spirit of sincerity and devotion to truth, it is not difficult for me to believe that the task could have been done much better, that stronger arguments might have been found and, above all, that they might have been presented much more effectively. Still, I am convinced that the reasons here given are sufficient to establish the truth, and should they not succeed in convincing the adversaries, some other writer will surely appear with power to enlighten their ignorance.
